Minneapolis, Minnesota based commercial interior design firm PureAlchemy Design has been featured in an article in Plymouth Magazine. The design company has been providing services to commercial clients in the Minneapolis area for some time. It was its renovation work for SeaChange, a Minneapolis print and marketing company, that got noticed by the magazine. Of particular importance is its unique approach to its award-winning interior design for SeaChange.

PureAlchemy provides commercial interior design services that focus on maximizing space while up-cycling or reusing existing pieces for smart design that offers sustainability, creativity, and productivity. Principal Stephany Eaton recently commented on the feature stating, "We could not be more honored to be featured in Plymouth Magazine. The article is amazing and really lets people know what our design firm stands for."

The Plymouth Magazine Expose showcases work done by the design firm, stating that they are making waves among businesses in the Minneapolis area. It highlights the fact that PureAlchemy works toward building environments that feature different elements including, furniture, space planning and layout, color, and overall work environment.

The article states that the company delivers a "breath of fresh air through an entire space," a statement that Eaton is particularly proud of. She says that businesses need to focus on their overall design for more than just aesthetic reasons. She explains, "We want to help businesses with their flow, and consider everything from workflow and efficiency to lighting and balance to give our clients exactly what they need."

Eaton says that their designs lead not just to higher levels of productivity but more importantly, to the overall well-being of the company and its employees and customers. This is highlighted in the feature article.

The Minneapolis commercial interior design firm reuses existing pieces to help businesses save money, which Eaton says can completely change how the business looks. Overall, the firm focuses on smart design and works with commercial clients to ensure an overall balance in design and functionality.

The featured expose is currently available online and can be read on the official website of Plymouth Magazine. Commercial clients in and around the Minneapolis area who would like to schedule a consultation with PureAlchemy Design can contact Stephany Eaton through the company's official website.
