February 17, 2026 -
Hollywoodland Movers has issued a statement announcing the introduction of its labor-only moving service, now available to residents and businesses throughout Los Angeles County and its surrounding communities. The company authorized this release to inform the public about the service, outline the procedures that support its operations, and clarify the type of assistance offered to those who require labor but do not have access to transportation services. Although newly established, the company has provided moving support since its inception, and this announcement marks the first official recognition of the labor-only service as a standalone offering.

Hollywoodland Movers began providing labor assistance upon entering the market, leveraging the expertise of its leadership team. Although the business is new, the team responsible for the labor-only service brings more than twelve years of experience in the moving field. The organization stated that this background influenced practices aimed at ensuring the safe and organized handling of household and workplace items.

The labor-only service was created in response to demand from households and businesses seeking help with the physical aspects of moving while using their own transportation. Hollywoodland Movers stated that many residents rely on rental trucks, personal vehicles, portable storage units, or on-site containers, but still require trained personnel to load, unload, or reposition furniture, boxed items, and equipment. The company explained that the service addresses these needs by providing skilled labor capable of performing the physical requirements of moving without the need for a full-service truck.

Hollywoodland Movers reported that the labor-only service supports a range of situations, including loading personal vehicles, lifting furniture within a residence, transferring belongings into storage units, rearranging items during renovations, or assisting with staging activities. The service is also used by businesses that need temporary lifting support in office or retail environments. In each situation, the team follows established procedures for handling and placement.

The company emphasized that the labor-only service differs from traditional full-service moving because the team provides labor but does not transport items between locations. This structure enables households and businesses to maintain control over transportation while receiving professional support for the physical aspects of a move. Hollywoodland Movers noted that this distinction has become increasingly relevant as more individuals choose to manage their own transportation.

The service begins with an assessment of items requiring physical handling. The team evaluates furniture, boxed belongings, appliances, décor, and equipment to determine lifting and placement needs. Hollywoodland Movers stated that this assessment supports safe handling by reducing the risk of damage or injury. Once complete, the team organizes a sequence for moving items based on size, weight, and fragility.

The organization stated that the labor-only service benefits households and businesses seeking flexibility. Some individuals prefer to drive their own rental trucks, while others require assistance during remodeling projects. Companies may request labor support for internal transitions rather than whole moves. Hollywoodland Movers reported that the service was created to address these varied needs by supplying trained personnel for the physical work associated with moving tasks.

Company owner Michael Weeks offered a statement regarding the announcement. He said, ?The labor-only service was created because not every situation requires a full moving truck. Many people simply need trained help with the physical side of moving, and our team has years of experience performing that work.?

Michael Weeks added that Hollywoodland Movers waited to announce the service until its training program, equipment preparation, and workflow procedures were fully developed. The organization stated that these systems ensure consistent handling across different environments, including multi-story residences, commercial offices, and storage facilities.

Hollywoodland Movers stated that the labor-only service is suitable for apartments, condominiums, multi-room residences, small businesses, retail spaces, and offices. Many customers find the service useful during partial moves, on-site reorganizations, or situations involving heavy or bulky items. The company explained that its workflow enables personnel to adapt to varied environments while maintaining order during lifting, disassembly, and placement.

Hollywoodland Movers reported that procedures for the labor-only service include the use of controlled lifting techniques and the organized placement of items. These steps help ensure that belongings remain secure when individuals load storage units or drive their own vehicles. By maintaining a consistent sequence during loading and unloading, the team supports safer and more manageable transitions.

The organization noted that demand for labor-only support has increased as more households and businesses choose rental trucks or mobile storage systems, and as companies seek internal labor support rather than relocation. Hollywoodland Movers stated that its personnel use handling methods informed by years of experience, which supports consistent performance across all assignments.

With the introduction of the labor-only service, Hollywoodland Movers stated its intention to support those navigating the physical challenges of moving without full-service assistance. The company emphasized that the service reflects its commitment to providing organized and reliable support during transitions.
