Pride Cleaning And Restoration Completes Historic Church Restoration Following Winter Pipe Damage

March 05, 2026

ST. LOUIS, MO - March 05, 2026 -
Pride Cleaning And Restoration, Inc. recently completed a comprehensive restoration project at a historic church in St. Louis, demonstrating the company's expertise in addressing complex water damage scenarios in religious and heritage structures.

The project, which showcased the company's water damage restoration capabilities, involved extensive repairs after frozen pipes burst during a severe winter cold snap, causing significant flooding throughout the church's sanctuary and lower levels. The incident highlighted the vulnerability of older buildings to extreme weather conditions and the importance of specialized restoration services for preserving community landmarks.

"Historic buildings present unique restoration challenges that require both technical expertise and sensitivity to architectural preservation," said Jim Seubert, Project Director at Pride Cleaning And Restoration. "This church restoration project exemplified our team's ability to balance modern restoration techniques with respect for the building's original character and significance to the community."

The restoration process began with immediate water extraction and structural drying to prevent further damage to the church's century-old wooden fixtures and ornate architectural details. The team employed specialized drying equipment designed for large commercial spaces while carefully protecting stained glass windows, carved woodwork, and other irreplaceable elements that define the church's historic character.

Beyond addressing the immediate water damage, the restoration team worked closely with church leadership to ensure minimal disruption to worship services and community programs. The project required coordination with multiple stakeholders, including insurance adjusters, preservation consultants, and church officials, to develop a restoration plan that met both practical and aesthetic requirements.

The successful completion of this project reinforces the critical role that professional restoration services play in preserving community assets. Churches and other historic buildings often serve as anchors for their neighborhoods, hosting not only religious services but also community meetings, cultural events, and social services. When disaster strikes these structures, rapid and expert intervention becomes essential for community continuity.

"Seeing the church return to its former glory and watching the congregation gather again in their restored sanctuary reminded us why this work matters," added Seubert. "Every St Louis restoration project we undertake has its own story, but helping communities recover from unexpected disasters remains at the heart of our mission."

The church restoration project also underscored the importance of emergency preparedness for facility managers and property owners, particularly during extreme weather seasons. Frozen pipes remain one of the most common causes of water damage in the Midwest, with older buildings facing heightened risk due to aging infrastructure and less robust insulation.
