February 20, 2026 -
Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. has announced the continued expansion of its work injury lawyer services in 2026, strengthening its focus on representing injured workers in Goshen, NY and throughout the Hudson Valley. The firm stated that the expansion responds to ongoing workplace injury claims across construction, healthcare, transportation, and manufacturing sectors in the region.

?Workplace injury cases require careful attention to statutory deadlines, medical documentation, and coordination with insurance carriers,? said Brian Mittman, managing partner at Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. ?Our firm continues to dedicate resources to ensuring that injured workers understand the legal process and the options available under New York law.?

Founded in 1933, Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. has operated for more than nine decades and concentrates its practice on personal injury and workers? compensation matters. The firm maintains offices in New York and represents clients in claims involving workplace accidents, construction site incidents, repetitive stress injuries, and occupational illnesses. Its legal team handles cases governed by the New York Workers? Compensation Law as well as third-party liability claims that may arise from workplace events.

Workers? compensation claims in Goshen are subject to specific procedural requirements. Injured employees must report workplace incidents within prescribed timeframes and file claims through the New York State Workers? Compensation Board. Benefits may include coverage for medical treatment, partial wage replacement, and disability classifications determined by medical evaluations and statutory guidelines.

In certain circumstances, injured workers may pursue third-party claims in addition to workers? compensation benefits. These claims may involve contractors, equipment manufacturers, property owners, or other entities whose actions contributed to the incident. Civil litigation in such matters requires the presentation of evidence including accident reports, safety records, and expert assessments regarding workplace conditions.

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. represents clients in hearings before administrative law judges and in court proceedings when necessary. The firm?s attorneys review medical records, employment documentation, and insurance correspondence to determine compliance with applicable regulations. Representation may include appeals of denied claims or disputes regarding benefit classifications and duration.

The expansion of services in Goshen reflects broader industry trends involving workplace safety oversight and regulatory compliance. Construction and infrastructure projects in the Hudson Valley have continued to generate claims related to falls, equipment accidents, and structural hazards. Healthcare and logistics sectors have also reported injuries associated with lifting, repetitive motion, and transportation incidents.

New York labor laws, including provisions related to scaffolding and gravity-related injuries, can affect liability determinations in construction-related claims. Courts evaluate whether statutory protections apply and whether proper safety devices were provided at the time of the incident. These legal standards differ from workers? compensation proceedings and may influence the scope of recoverable damages in civil actions.

In addition to litigation, the firm provides informational consultations to individuals seeking clarification regarding their rights following a workplace injury. Fee structures in workers? compensation cases are generally subject to approval by the Workers? Compensation Board, and contingency arrangements in personal injury cases are governed by state regulations. These frameworks are intended to provide oversight and transparency in attorney compensation.

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. reports that it continues to monitor legislative developments affecting injured workers, including adjustments to benefit rates and procedural rules issued by regulatory authorities. Ongoing compliance with filing deadlines and evidentiary requirements remains central to the firm?s case management practices. The firm states that maintaining familiarity with statutory changes allows it to address claims within established legal standards.
