

A+ Revenue Cycle Training Announces Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp and CPC® Exam Prep Program for Spring 2026

February 25, 2026

February 25, 2026 -
A+ Revenue Cycle Training has announced the launch of its Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp, a structured CPC® Bootcamp program designed to provide focused CPC® exam prep for individuals preparing to sit for the Certified Professional Coder® credential in spring 2026. The new offering is scheduled to begin in April 2026 and is intended to address the growing demand for comprehensive, guided preparation in medical coding education as healthcare organizations continue to seek certified coding professionals.

The Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp is structured as an intensive training experience centered on exam readiness, coding accuracy, and practical application of coding systems. The bootcamp format is designed to help participants refine coding skills, improve speed and confidence, and identify knowledge gaps before testing.

The CPC® credential remains one of the most recognized certifications in outpatient coding, physician coding, and revenue cycle management. As healthcare systems continue to navigate regulatory changes and documentation requirements, certified coders play a central role in ensuring accurate reimbursement and compliance. The launch of the CPC® Bootcamp comes at a time when many aspiring coders are preparing for spring and early summer exam windows, often aligning study schedules with academic calendars and career transitions.

A+ Revenue Cycle Training stated that the Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp was developed in response to feedback from students seeking more structured CPC® exam prep. While self-paced study materials remain widely available, many candidates report difficulty translating textbook knowledge into real-time coding decisions under exam conditions. The bootcamp addresses this gap by emphasizing applied learning and scenario-based coding exercises that mirror real-world documentation.

Madison Carter, founder of A+ Revenue Cycle Training, explained that the CPC® Bootcamp was created to provide clarity and structure during what can be an overwhelming preparation process. ?The Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp is designed to give students a clear roadmap for CPC® exam prep,? Carter said. ?Many candidates know the material but struggle with applying it under timed conditions. This program focuses on building both technical knowledge and exam-day confidence.?

Spring is often a pivotal time for individuals pursuing healthcare certifications, as many begin renewed study efforts following the start of a new year. A+ Revenue Cycle Training indicated that launching the Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp in April 2026 provides candidates with a focused preparation period leading into spring and early summer exam dates. The seasonal timing also aligns with workforce planning cycles in many healthcare organizations that anticipate hiring needs later in the year.

The CPC® Bootcamp is delivered through a structured online format, allowing participants to access instruction remotely while maintaining a defined schedule. Sessions are designed to balance comprehensive review with practical application, ensuring that candidates engage actively with the material rather than relying solely on passive study methods. According to the company, this blended approach aims to improve retention and exam performance outcomes.

Revenue cycle management continues to evolve in response to payer policy changes, documentation standards, and regulatory oversight. Accurate coding directly affects claims processing, reimbursement timelines, and compliance reporting. By focusing on CPC® exam prep grounded in current coding guidelines, the Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp seeks to prepare participants not only for certification but also for entry into professional coding roles.

Carter emphasized that the goal of the bootcamp extends beyond test preparation. ?The objective is not only to help candidates pass the CPC® exam but to prepare them for the realities of professional coding within the revenue cycle,? Carter said. ?Strong coding skills contribute to financial integrity and operational efficiency in healthcare organizations.?

The launch of the Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp reflects broader trends in professional education that prioritize structured, outcome-focused training programs. As remote learning platforms have expanded, students increasingly seek guided instruction that combines flexibility with accountability. A+ Revenue Cycle Training reported that the bootcamp format provides scheduled milestones, interactive engagement, and direct instructor feedback, elements that are often absent in self-directed study models.

Enrollment in the CPC® Bootcamp is open to individuals who have completed foundational coding coursework as well as those who have prior experience in medical billing or healthcare administration and are seeking certification. The program is structured to accommodate varying levels of experience while maintaining a consistent emphasis on CPC® exam objectives.

In preparation for the March 2026 launch, A+ Revenue Cycle Training has released detailed information outlining program components, session schedules, and enrollment requirements. The company indicated that class size will be managed to ensure meaningful instructor interaction and individualized feedback during practice reviews.

The Certified Professional Coder® Bootcamp represents a strategic expansion of A+ Revenue Cycle Training?s educational offerings within the revenue cycle management field. By concentrating on CPC® exam prep and structured review, the organization aims to address ongoing demand for certified coding professionals while supporting individuals pursuing advancement in healthcare careers.

As spring approaches and candidates finalize certification plans, A+ Revenue Cycle Training encourages prospective participants to review program details and registration information available through the company?s website.
