Udemy has announced that they have released a new course that encourages people to make money teaching through online universities as distance learning adjunct instructors. The course is suitable for graduate degree holders and helps them generate a lucrative household income. The course can be accessed through <https://www.udemy.com/making-money-teaching-online-get-your-first-academic-job/>

Daniel Hall, J.D. from Udemy says: "We're very happy to see that the Udemy course that we are promoting is proving to be very popular, and that it is helping people find work. Perhaps most important to us, however, is the fact that those who are finding work thanks to our course are providing an invaluable service to others, which is teaching the next generation of academics."

Of course, online teaching is not for everybody. Read this recent blog available at <http://www.onlinecollege.org/2013/07/15/breaking-into-online-teaching/>, which shows people not just how to break into online teaching, but also to determine whether or not it is right for them. It covers such areas as organization and time management, online communication, technical skills, and experience. All of these have to be up to standard in order to become an online educator.

"A lot of people immediately think that online teaching is a fantastic job, simply because it means you can work from home," adds Daniel Hall. "However, it is a serious job that requires a significant time commitment and quite a bit of technological knowledge. We want to make sure people are aware of this before they enroll in the course, so that they don't end up disappointed."

For additional reading the company recommends the book "Make Money Teaching Online: How to Land Your First Academic Job, Build Credibility, and Earn a Six-Figure Salary," by Danielle Babb, Ph.D. and Jim Maribella, MBA. This book is available on Amazon through <http://www.amazon.com/Make-Money-Teaching-Online-Credibility/dp/0470100877>. It provides a wealth of information to support the Udemy course and will better prepare students for both the pros and cons of being an online instructor.
