LINDEN, MI - March 06, 2026 -

With interest in do-it-yourself woodworking projects increasing amid a focus on sustainable materials, The Winfield Collection is outlining its range of Easter-themed woodworking patterns. Established in 1981, the company has provided full-size woodworking patterns for over 40 years, adapting to trends such as the use of reclaimed wood in crafts. This overview comes as crafters prepare for spring, highlighting designs that incorporate both traditional plywood and recycled options like pallet wood.

The Easter collection includes more than 30 patterns, categorized by themes such as bunnies, eggs, crosses, and interactive displays. These are designed for various skill levels, using basic tools including a jigsaw and paint. Many patterns are available in multiple sizes, with options for digital downloads or printed versions to accommodate different project timelines.

Bunny patterns cover a variety of scales and styles. Examples include family sets with multiple bunny sizes, large sitting and standing figures, and oversized versions assembled from several plywood sheets. Some designs use recycled pallet wood for bunnies and eggs, or reversible figures that serve dual holidays like St. Patrick's Day and Easter. Artist-themed bunnies depict figures painting or creating, available in standard and enlarged formats.

Egg patterns feature sets of six designs in giant, large, and enormous scales, intended for yard or indoor use. These allow for painting in various colors to match seasonal themes.

Interactive patterns include train setups with locomotives and cars carrying Easter motifs, parade collections combining bunnies and chicks, and express designs with bunny engines and themed cars. Teamwork scenes show bunny pairs preparing holiday elements, while delivery patterns feature bunnies with baskets.

Cross patterns address the religious aspect of Easter, offered in small, large, and gigantic sizes for different display needs. Chick patterns include hatching designs and premium oversized versions cut from single sheets.

Fence peeker patterns provide accents with bunnies and other figures that attach to fences, alongside grade-themed displays with bunnies and eggs.

This assortment aligns with woodworking trends observed in 2026, where sustainable practices and accessible projects are prominent. Reports indicate a rise in DIY activities using eco-friendly materials, such as reclaimed wood for decor. Common projects involve functional items like signs and shelves, often incorporating recycled elements to minimize environmental impact. Easter-specific crafts frequently use simple, budget-conscious ideas like paper-based figures and natural motifs.

User comments on social platforms reflect engagement with similar patterns. One review states, "I've used these patterns for years ? they're clear and produce reliable results." Another mentions, "The option for digital files helps with starting projects quickly." These align with the company's history of supporting crafters through pattern evolution.

The patterns include instructions for cutting and assembly, with suggestions for materials. Digital formats enable immediate access for smaller designs, while paper prints are suited for larger ones. This flexibility supports the shift toward combining traditional methods with digital tools in woodworking.

"Mike Easler, President of The Winfield Collection, noted the connection to current trends: 'Woodworking Patterns for Easter fit into the broader movement toward sustainable crafting, where people use reclaimed materials for seasonal projects.'"

Easler continued, "Over 40 years, we've seen woodworking evolve, and our patterns reflect that by offering options in both paper and digital forms to meet diverse needs."

The Easter patterns are part of an extensive catalog that covers other holidays, yard art, toys, and furniture. They can be purchased online, with additional supplies like paints and brushes available.
