

FaithTime Launches Social Faith App to Connect Young Christians Through Live Prayer and Community

March 20, 2026 -
FaithTime has announced the launch of its social faith app, a platform designed to end spiritual loneliness among young Christians in America by building a real, living community around shared belief. The FaithTime community app is built not for solo devotion but for connection ? giving Gen Z believers aged 18 to 28 a place to show up as they are, share what they are going through, and find others who genuinely understand them.

Spiritual isolation is a growing challenge among young adults in America. Church attendance among Gen Z has declined steadily, yet surveys continue to show that young people hunger for meaning, belonging, and authentic spiritual community. The FaithTime devotional app addresses this gap by combining the accessibility of a mobile platform with the relational depth of a faith community ? creating a peer-to-peer sanctuary that meets young believers where they already are.

At the heart of the FaithTime experience is Faith Gathering, a live drop-in space where users can pray, read Scripture, and talk with believers their own age. There is no pressure to speak, no performance required, and no barriers to entry ? just presence. Users can join or host a live room in a single tap, invite friends, and form small, safe circles of encouragement. The format is built for a generation that values authenticity over formality and connection over ceremony.

The Faith Community feed extends this spirit of openness into an ongoing, living record of real-life faith. Users can post honestly about their struggles, moments of gratitude, and personal growth milestones. Prayer requests are not simply content ? they are living conversations. Other users can respond, pray alongside, and follow up, creating a network of genuine spiritual support that moves beyond passive consumption and into active community.

Faith Games add a layer of lighthearted connection to the platform. Short and shareable mini-games ? including Bible trivia, verse puzzles, and character prompts ? give users a playful way to engage with Scripture and invite friends into the experience. Games are designed to be completed in as little as ten seconds to one minute, making faith participation accessible even on the busiest days. Results can be shared to the community feed or used to challenge friends directly.

Tying the entire experience together is the AI-powered Faith Space. Rather than presenting users with a static dashboard, Faith Space reads where each user is emotionally and spiritually and points them toward the right corner of the community ? whether that is a live prayer room, a prayer thread in the feed, or a quick game. The result is that no user has to figure out where to start alone. The platform meets each person in their current moment and offers a next step that feels natural, not overwhelming.

The FaithTime community app is positioned not as a church replacement or a content platform, but as a peer-to-peer sanctuary for modern seekers. The app's design philosophy reflects a generation that does not want to be preached at but does want to belong ? a generation looking for real people, real conversations, and a community where faith is lived out loud rather than performed.

The launch of the FaithTime community app marks a significant step toward making spiritual community a daily, accessible reality for a generation that is both deeply connected online and deeply hungry for meaning. By combining live prayer rooms, a community feed, playful faith games, and AI-driven personalization into a single platform, FaithTime offers something the faith-tech space has not previously delivered: a truly social experience built around the needs of young Christians.
