March 31, 2026

POUGHKEEPSIE, NY - March 31, 2026 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. has announced the availability of work injury legal services through its Poughkeepsie office as part of the firm's New York workers' compensation practice. The announcement highlights the firm's ongoing work with injured employees in claims involving workplace accidents, benefits disputes, and related proceedings before the New York workers' compensation system, while extending access to the firm's long-established practice model in the Hudson Valley.

"The firm's role in work injury matters is to help injured workers understand the legal process, document their claims, and address issues that may arise during the course of a case," said Brian Mittman, Esq., Managing Partner of Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. Brian Mittman is identified by the firm as its managing partner, and the firm presents workers' compensation among its principal practice areas.

Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. was founded in 1933, according to the firm's published history, and it operates under the name The Disability Guys in its public-facing materials. The firm states that its practice includes workers' compensation, Social Security disability, and personal injury matters, with offices serving clients in multiple parts of New York, including Poughkeepsie.

Work injury cases in New York can involve a range of legal and procedural issues beyond the initial reporting of an accident. A claim may require medical records, employment documentation, filings with the Workers' Compensation Board, and responses to insurer challenges involving the extent of injury, causation, lost wages, or continuing eligibility for benefits. The firm's published materials also describe representation involving hearings, appeals, and lump-sum settlement matters within the workers' compensation framework.

Through its Poughkeepsie office, the firm is positioning work injury representation within a broader regional practice that addresses injuries sustained in construction, transportation, office, and other employment settings. The office listing published by the firm identifies its Poughkeepsie location on Catharine Street, and the firm's workers' compensation materials indicate that it handles claims for employees across a variety of industries and job classifications.

The firm's background section states that it was established around the principle that people injured on the job should be treated with respect, a theme that remains connected to its work injury practice. On its website, the firm also maintains pages that discuss claims procedure, common accident types, appeals, and related topics, reflecting an emphasis on providing publicly available information alongside case representation.

Additional information about the firm is available at learn more and through its Poughkeepsie workers' comp section.

The announcement of work injury legal services through the Poughkeepsie office aligns with the firm's stated focus on disability-related and workplace injury claims in Poughkeepsie, New York. By formalizing attention on this area through the Hudson Valley office, Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. is adding local access to a practice it identifies as part of its long-running service structure for injured workers and claimants dealing with work-related injuries and benefit disputes.

The firm also notes that workers' compensation law in New York continues to evolve through administrative decisions and regulatory updates, which may affect how claims are evaluated and processed over time. Markhoff & Mittman, P.C. maintains internal review procedures to monitor these developments and incorporate them into case handling practices. The firm states that this approach allows its legal team to address procedural changes, documentation standards, and hearing requirements as they arise within the state system. As part of its ongoing operations, the firm continues to provide informational resources intended to clarify the claims process and outline general expectations for individuals pursuing work injury cases.
