McNaughton Photography Announces Expanded Legacy Portrait Services for Quad Cities Families

April 07, 2026

MOLINE, IL - April 07, 2026 -
McNaughton Photography, a portrait studio serving the Quad Cities region, announces the expansion of its legacy portrait services in response to increased requests for professional documentation of family histories. The Moline, Illinois-based studio reports a 40 percent increase in bookings for portrait sessions that combine traditional photography with oral history preservation.

The expansion includes additional availability for Legacy Portrait Interview Sessions, which document family stories through both portraiture and filmed interviews. These sessions, conducted in clients' homes, address growing concerns about the potential loss of personal histories as older generations age.

"We have expanded our schedule to accommodate the increased demand for legacy preservation services," said Stacey McNaughton, owner of McNaughton Photography. "Families are recognizing that important stories and connections need to be documented before they are lost."

The studio's Legacy Portrait Interview Sessions combine professional photography with video documentation. During these sessions, photographers create portraits in meaningful home settings while recording interviews that capture personal stories and experiences. This dual approach provides families with both visual and oral documentation of their heritage.

Recent data from the Professional Photographers of America indicates that portrait studios nationwide have seen similar increases in requests for legacy documentation services. The trend corresponds with demographic shifts as baby boomers reach retirement age and seek to preserve family narratives for younger generations.

McNaughton Photography professional headshots have also expanded to meet demand from local business professionals. The studio's monthly Signature Day events, which include professional styling support and same-day image selection, serve corporate clients and entrepreneurs throughout the Quad Cities business community.

The portrait studio has adapted its services to address changing preferences in how families preserve memories. While digital photography dominates casual image-making, the demand for physical portraits and professionally produced albums has remained steady among families seeking archival-quality documentation.

"The combination of professional portraiture and filmed interviews creates a comprehensive record that family portraits alone cannot provide," noted McNaughton. "These sessions document not just how family members looked, but also their voices, stories, and relationships."

The expansion of services comes as portrait studios nationwide adapt to evolving client needs. Industry reports show that studios offering specialized legacy services have seen consistent growth, particularly in regions with aging populations.

McNaughton Photography has operated in the Quad Cities region since 2018, providing portrait services to families and professionals throughout the area. The studio specializes in portrait photography that documents personal and family histories, offering services that range from professional headshots to comprehensive legacy documentation sessions. The business maintains a studio location in Moline while also providing on-location services throughout the region.
