April 06, 2026 -
Manor Works Painting, a residential painting contractor headquartered in Aldie, Virginia, has announced the continued expansion of its professional carpentry services throughout Loudoun, Fairfax, and Prince William counties. The company?s carpentry division supports both interior and exterior home improvement projects, providing homeowners with craftsmanship that complements its established painting and maintenance operations.

Founded in 1998, Manor Works Painting has served Northern Virginia homeowners for more than two decades with a focus on precision, reliability, and long-term property care. The company?s carpentry services address a wide range of residential needs, from structural repairs and wood replacement to trim work and decorative installations. Each project follows a structured approach emphasizing preparation, communication, and attention to detail.

Lucia Tirondola, owner of Manor Works Painting, said the company developed its carpentry services to give homeowners a single, coordinated solution for repair and painting needs. ?Many clients require carpentry work before painting can begin,? Lucia Tirondola said. ?By handling both aspects internally, we ensure surfaces are properly restored and prepared, which improves durability and the final appearance of every project.?

The carpentry service includes both exterior and interior work. Exteriors often involve replacing or repairing fascia, soffits, dormers, window trim, siding, and door frames damaged by weather or age. Interior projects include installing or refinishing crown molding, wainscoting, baseboards, chair rails, and coffered ceilings. Each job begins with a detailed inspection to determine whether materials can be restored or should be replaced.

Manor Works Painting employs full-time carpenters trained in material selection, joinery, and finishing techniques for residential environments. The company uses both traditional wood and low-maintenance composite materials such as PVC, depending on the structure and homeowner preference. This flexibility allows projects to suit both older and newly constructed homes.

Each project begins with an assessment to identify deterioration and measure dimensions for replacement. Once materials are selected, carpenters perform repairs or installations following approved plans, coordinating with project managers and painters to ensure transitions between surfaces are seamless. This process minimizes disruption and maintains consistency throughout the finished home.

The company places strong emphasis on surface protection and sequencing. Before work begins, floors, furniture, and landscaping are covered to prevent damage. For interior projects, dust containment systems help maintain clean environments. Once installations are complete, surfaces are primed and painted to match adjacent areas, creating a uniform finish that balances function and design.

Lucia Tirondola noted that adding carpentry to the company?s services improves efficiency and accountability. ?By keeping carpentry work in-house, we maintain direct oversight of every phase,? she said. ?It strengthens communication with homeowners and allows us to uphold consistent quality and safety standards.?

All carpentry projects are performed by insured, trained professionals who follow Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) protocols. Employees receive ongoing instruction in tool handling, ladder safety, and installation techniques. The company?s focus on training ensures uniform workmanship while reducing risks commonly associated with subcontracted labor.

The carpentry service also addresses one of the most common challenges homeowners face: hidden wood rot or structural deterioration found during exterior painting or remodeling. Identifying and repairing damaged wood early helps prevent larger structural issues, improve energy efficiency, and preserve the home?s framework. Many exterior repairs use composite trim resistant to moisture, reducing maintenance and extending the life of the painted finish.

The same standards apply to interior work, where precise measurement and alignment are essential. Carpenters ensure proportion and symmetry by referencing architectural drawings or matching existing designs in historic homes. The goal is to maintain each property?s character while enhancing functionality and appearance.

The continued development of the carpentry division reflects a growing trend among Northern Virginia homeowners to invest in long-term improvements rather than temporary updates. Combining carpentry with painting services allows residents to complete multiple upgrades within one project. The integrated approach reduces the need for multiple contractors and ensures consistency from start to finish.

Lucia Tirondola added that increased demand stems from convenience and reliability. ?Homeowners appreciate working with one team that manages the entire process,? she said. ?It eliminates scheduling conflicts and ensures better coordination between repair and finishing stages.?

Each project concludes with a quality review to confirm installations meet measurement and finish specifications. Clients receive documentation summarizing completed work and recommendations for material care. The company also offers warranty coverage on labor and materials, consistent with its other residential services.

Carpentry services are available to homeowners across Aldie, Great Falls, McLean, Fairfax, and surrounding communities. Appointments for inspections and estimates can be scheduled through the company?s website or by contacting the main office. The expansion demonstrates Manor Works Painting?s commitment to providing reliable, detail-oriented home improvement services that meet the needs of Northern Virginia residents.
