The Disability Guys Announces Social Security Disability Resource

April 10, 2026

April 10, 2026 -
The Disability Guys has announced the publication of updated informational material focused on Social Security Disability claims, with distribution centered on individuals seeking guidance through the firm?s Yonkers office. The update is intended to address continued public interest in eligibility, claim preparation, denials, and appeals within the Social Security Disability process.

The announcement comes as The Disability Guys continues work in Social Security Disability and related disability matters through Markhoff & Mittman P.C., the law firm behind the brand. Brian Mittman, Esq., managing partner and owner, said, ?Social Security Disability claims involve detailed records, procedural deadlines, and administrative review, so clear information remains an important part of the process for individuals and families evaluating their next steps.?

Social Security Disability cases often require applicants to document medical conditions, work history, treatment records, and the ways in which an impairment affects sustained employment. Claims may move through several stages, including an initial filing, reconsideration, a hearing before an administrative law judge, and additional review when necessary. For that reason, firms that publish claim information frequently address both the procedural structure of the system and the records that are commonly reviewed during a case.

The Disability Guys operates under Markhoff & Mittman P.C., which states that the firm was founded in 1933 and handles workers? compensation, Social Security Disability, Supplemental Security Income, and related disability matters in New York. The firm lists a Yonkers office at 51 Smart Ave., Suite 200A, alongside other locations in the state, and identifies Social Security Disability as one of the practice areas connected to the firm?s disability work. Readers seeking background information can visit The Disability Guys website for general firm details.

Brian Mittman is identified by the firm as managing partner and owner, and his attorney profile lists Social Security Disability among his areas of practice. The same profile states that he has also served as a faculty member and lecturer presenting continuing legal education programs, a detail the firm connects to its broader educational work on disability and workplace injury issues. Additional professional background is available through the Brian Mittman profile page.

The updated Social Security Disability material is framed as an informational resource rather than a case result or client narrative. Its subject matter includes the administrative path of a disability claim, the kinds of documentation that may become relevant during review, and the distinctions between different disability benefit programs that claimants may encounter when evaluating available options.

The firm?s broader website structure shows dedicated sections for disability-related topics, including Social Security Disability and Supplemental Security Income, which places the current announcement within an established area of its practice communications. In that context, the release presents the new material as part of an ongoing effort to organize public-facing information around disability claims and legal process. More information is available on the firm?s website.

The announcement also reflects a broader pattern in legal services communications, where firms publish procedural guidance to explain how administrative claims move from filing to review. In the case of Social Security Disability matters, that information commonly concerns deadlines, evidentiary records, hearing preparation, and the distinctions between initial denials and later stages of appeal. Within that framework, The Disability Guys states that its updated material is intended to provide a clearer overview of the Social Security Disability process for people following developments through the firm?s Yonkers work injury office.
