

Chase Buchanan Private Wealth Management Launches Expat Money Matters Podcast

April 14, 2026

PAPHOS, CY - April 14, 2026 -

Chase Buchanan has launched a podcast offering UK expatriates guidance on cross-border finance and taxation.

Chase Buchanan Private Wealth Management announced the launch of its podcast series, Expat Money Matters, developed to provide information on international financial planning and taxation for UK expatriates.

The series features discussions between financial professionals and regional specialists, covering topics such as cross-border taxation, pension planning, tax residency, and international investment strategies. Episodes include contributions from internal advisors as well as external experts based in regions with significant expatriate populations, including Spain, Malta, and Portugal.

According to the company, the podcast was created to address common gaps in financial understanding that can arise when individuals relocate abroad. The series aims to explain regulatory, tax, and financial considerations that may affect expatriates in different jurisdictions.

The podcast is hosted by Chase Buchanan Managing Director Georgina Eldridge, and includes commentary from various advisers and guests.

The Expat Money Matters series also includes a Weekly Market Update, which provides summaries of recent economic developments, financial news, and market-related information relevant to international investors. The company stated that this segment is based on curated market updates and commentary from its advisory team.

Episodes currently available address topics such as pension transfer structures, tax treatment of savings vehicles after relocation, residency requirements, inheritance considerations, and investment planning across different currencies and jurisdictions.

The podcast is available through YouTube and other major podcast platforms.
