JACKSONVILLE, FL - April 28, 2026 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite, a Jacksonville-based family law firm with three Board Certified Marital & Family Law specialists, has released a new episode of its When Split Happens podcast examining the critical decision points that lead individuals to seek professional legal representation in family law matters.

The latest episode addresses a fundamental question many Florida residents face when confronting divorce, custody disputes, or other family legal issues: determining when professional legal guidance becomes essential versus attempting to navigate the process independently. The discussion explores various scenarios where legal complexity, financial considerations, and parenting-related matters may warrant attorney involvement.

"The decision to hire a family law attorney often comes down to understanding the complexity of your specific situation," said Jay Henderlite, Board Certified Marital & Family Law Specialist and managing partner at Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite. "Through this episode, we aim to help listeners recognize the factors that might indicate when professional legal guidance could make a significant difference in their case outcomes."

The episode examines several key considerations that individuals typically face when evaluating their need for legal representation. These include situations involving substantial assets or debts, complex custody arrangements, disputes over alimony or child support, and cases where domestic violence or substance abuse issues are present. The discussion also covers scenarios where parties may have unequal bargaining power or when one spouse has already retained legal counsel.

The When Split Happens podcast serves as an ongoing educational series where attorneys from Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite discuss various legal topics affecting families throughout Florida. Each episode focuses on providing listeners with practical information to help them better understand family law concepts and make informed decisions about their situations. The podcast covers a wide range of topics including divorce procedures, child custody arrangements, time-sharing plans, alimony considerations, child support calculations, and effective co-parenting strategies after separation.

The firm maintains comprehensive media center resources where individuals can access podcast episodes, legal updates, and other educational materials. These resources are designed to help Florida residents gain a clearer understanding of family law matters without replacing the need for personalized legal consultation when circumstances warrant it.

"We recognize that every family situation is unique, and what works for one person may not be appropriate for another," added Henderlite. "This episode provides a framework for self-assessment, helping listeners evaluate their circumstances and determine whether their situation might benefit from professional legal expertise."

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite stands as the only law firm in Northeast Florida with three Board Certified Marital & Family Law Experts serving as managing partners. The firm handles a comprehensive range of family law matters including divorce, child custody, alimony, child support, adoptions, paternity cases, and prenuptial agreements. The firm also provides specialized services for military divorces, LGBTQ+ family matters, and collaborative divorce proceedings. Beyond family law, the practice extends to criminal defense matters including domestic violence cases, ensuring comprehensive legal support for clients facing interconnected legal challenges.
