MARIETTA, GA - April 22, 2026 -

As homeowners across Marietta and East Cobb continue to maintain older homes, update kitchens, and manage busy household routines, K L Contractor Plumbing Inc is drawing attention to one of the most common plumbing problems in the area: clogged kitchen sinks. The Marietta-based plumbing company is sharing guidance on the everyday habits and hidden issues that often lead to kitchen drain blockages, helping local residents recognize warning signs early and avoid more serious plumbing repairs.

Kitchen sink clogs are a frequent source of frustration for homeowners because they interrupt some of the most heavily used parts of the home. From cooking and cleanup to garbage disposal use and dishwashing, the kitchen sink handles constant daily demand. According to K L Contractor Plumbing Inc, many of the drain problems seen in Marietta and East Cobb homes build gradually over time and are often caused by routine behaviors that seem harmless at first.

?Kitchen sink clogs are one of those problems that many homeowners do not think about until the water stops draining,? said a representative for K L Contractor Plumbing Inc. ?In communities like Marietta and East Cobb, where families depend on their kitchens every day, even a slow drain can quickly become a major inconvenience.?

The company points to grease and cooking oil as one of the leading causes of clogged kitchen sinks. While grease may go down the drain in liquid form, it often cools and hardens inside the pipes, creating a sticky buildup that narrows the line and traps other debris. Over time, this can lead to slow drainage, recurring backups, and in some cases a complete blockage.

Food waste is another major contributor. Even in homes equipped with garbage disposals, too much food material can overwhelm the drain and create buildup inside the plumbing system. Dense foods, scraps left on plates, and improper disposal habits can all increase the likelihood of a clog, especially in households with heavy kitchen use.

K L Contractor Plumbing Inc also notes that soap residue can add to the problem. Although soap may not seem like a major issue on its own, repeated use can leave a film along the interior of pipes. When that residue combines with grease and food particles, it can accelerate the clogging process and make drains more difficult to clear.

In addition to buildup from daily use, the company says foreign objects and garbage disposal misuse are common causes of kitchen sink problems in local homes. Small items such as wrappers, produce labels, or non-food debris can accidentally enter the drain and become lodged in the line. Garbage disposals can also contribute to clogs when homeowners assume they can handle all food waste without consequence.

?Homes in East Cobb and Marietta see a wide range of plumbing issues, but kitchen sink clogs are especially common because they develop quietly,? the company representative said. ?People often notice slow drainage for days or weeks before they realize the problem is getting worse.?

The company adds that some sink clogs are not caused by surface debris alone. In certain cases, recurring drain issues may point to deeper plumbing concerns such as aging pipes, misaligned drain sections, or buildup farther down the line. That is one reason repeated clogs should not be ignored, especially when basic cleaning efforts fail to solve the problem for long.

For homeowners in Marietta and East Cobb, early warning signs can include water pooling in the sink, slow drainage, gurgling sounds, unpleasant odors, or backups that return shortly after the drain appears to clear. These symptoms often suggest that the blockage is still developing or that a larger issue may be present deeper in the plumbing system.

K L Contractor Plumbing Inc encourages local homeowners to take a preventative approach by keeping grease, oils, and excess food scraps out of the sink whenever possible. The company also recommends paying closer attention to garbage disposal habits and calling for professional service when drains repeatedly clog or show signs of reduced flow.

?Many homeowners try to manage the problem on their own for too long,? the representative said. ?But when a drain keeps backing up, it is usually a sign that the issue needs more than a temporary fix. Addressing it early can help prevent bigger plumbing repairs later.?

K L Contractor Plumbing Inc says that helping homeowners understand the causes behind these problems is an important part of reducing long-term plumbing damage and keeping kitchens working properly.
