

Cheese Removals and Transport Introduces Operational Updates to Home and Family Removals Service

April 21, 2026

BRIGHTON, UK - April 21, 2026 -

Cheese Removals and Transport has announced a series of operational updates to its home and family removals service, reflecting increased demand for structured household moves across Brighton and Hove and the wider Sussex region. The update follows a steady rise in residential relocations involving full family households, where coordination, planning, and careful handling of belongings are central to the moving process.

The Hove-based removals company, operated by brothers Luca and Alessio Giambrone, has been active across Sussex since 2023. While the business provides a range of moving services, including apartment removals, completion day removals, and national relocations, family household moves have continued to form a significant share of its work. The latest service update formalises several procedures developed through experience managing moves involving larger properties and multi-room households.

Home and family removals typically involve a greater volume of belongings and more complex logistical planning compared with smaller relocations. Larger furniture items, packed household contents, and varying access conditions between properties can all influence the pace and organisation of a moving day. Cheese Removals and Transport has refined its home and family removals service to introduce clearer preparation steps before moving day begins.

The updated process places greater emphasis on pre-move discussions to establish the scale of the move and identify potential access considerations at both properties. Details such as parking availability, stair access, and furniture dismantling requirements are reviewed in advance so that moving crews arrive with a clear understanding of the expected workload.

Luca Giambrone said the service update reflects patterns observed during family moves over the past year. ?Household moves involving families often involve more coordination because there are more rooms, more furniture, and more planning involved. The adjustments we have introduced are intended to make the preparation stage clearer so the moving day itself runs in a steady and organised way.?

The revised service also reinforces the company?s time-based pricing structure for local household moves, rather than calculating costs based on the number of items being moved. Local home and family removals continue to operate on an hourly basis. This approach allows families to add or remove items during packing without the need to renegotiate a fixed inventory list before the move begins.

For families relocating beyond the local area, the company continues to provide set-fee pricing for national moves. This distinction between hourly local removals and fixed relocation pricing is intended to provide clarity for households planning longer-distance moves where journey time and mileage form a significant part of the process.

Operational adjustments have also been introduced to improve load planning within removal vans. Larger household moves require careful placement of furniture, appliances, and packed boxes to ensure that items remain secure during transit. The updated service includes clearer internal procedures for arranging loads, ensuring unloading at the destination property proceeds in a structured sequence.

Alessio Giambrone explained that organisation is particularly important during family relocations. ?When an entire household is moving, the process needs to remain organised from start to finish. These changes focus on making sure belongings are loaded and delivered in a way that helps families settle into the new property without unnecessary disruption.?

The update also includes refinements to the company?s approach to furniture dismantling and reassembly when required. Larger household moves often involve beds, wardrobes, tables, and shelving units that must be dismantled for safe transport. By identifying these requirements during the preparation stage, moving crews can allocate time appropriately and ensure the necessary tools are available on the day of the move.

Home and family removals frequently involve moves between properties of different layouts and access conditions. Period homes with narrow staircases, modern developments with managed access systems, and suburban properties with driveway loading areas can each present different logistical considerations. The updated service framework is designed to accommodate these variations while maintaining consistent operational procedures.

The announcement reflects the company?s continued focus on adapting its services to match real-world moving conditions rather than fixed assumptions about how residential moves unfold. By reviewing patterns from previous household relocations, Cheese Removals and Transport has introduced a more structured preparation process to reduce uncertainty during larger moves.

The business operates across Brighton and Hove, Worthing, Portslade, Haywards Heath, Hassocks, and surrounding areas, supporting both local moves and national relocations. Home and family removals remain a central part of its residential services, particularly during seasonal periods when housing transactions increase.

Cheese Removals and Transport has confirmed that the updated home and family removals service is now in place for all new bookings. The adjustments form part of an ongoing review of how the company manages different types of household moves, with further operational refinements expected as relocation patterns continue to evolve.

The company stated that the objective of the update is to ensure that family household moves are managed with clear preparation, structured handling of belongings, and practical coordination throughout the moving process.
