

Crusaders Fence Launches Full-Service Fence Installation

May 11, 2026

CULPEPER, VA - May 11, 2026 -
Crusaders Fence, a newly launched fencing contractor founded by Conall Finn, has begun serving the Fredericksburg metropolitan area with residential and commercial fence installation, offering wood, vinyl, aluminum, chain link, and ranch fencing to property owners across Stafford, Spotsylvania, Culpeper, and surrounding counties in Central Virginia.

Finn spent more than a decade working in the fencing trade before founding Crusaders Fence. Over those years, he encountered a pattern in the regional residential market that shaped how he would run his own company. Contractor volume was growing as demand for privacy fencing and property enclosures increased across Central Virginia, but the repair calls that followed told a different story. Posts set too shallow for the region's dense red clay soil ? a moisture-retaining ground type that expands when wet and contracts during dry periods ? would shift out of alignment within a few seasons. Installations built with interior-grade hardware corroded in outdoor exposure. Concrete footings cracked through freeze-thaw cycles because the mix or depth was wrong. Finn founded Crusaders Fence to address those failures directly: owner involvement on every job, same-day written estimates during on-site consultations, and construction methods calibrated to local soil and climate conditions rather than to speed alone.

The company's work begins before any post goes in the ground. Crusaders Fence manages the permit process and HOA approval documentation for each property owner and schedules Virginia 811 utility marking ? the state-mandated service that identifies buried gas, water, and electrical lines before excavation begins ? as part of standard job preparation. Posts are set in high-PSI concrete, a fast-curing, high-strength mix poured below the frost line, and all hardware is rated for outdoor exposure. After each installation, Finn walks the property with the homeowner, reviews the finished work, and returns for a follow-up visit once the fence has settled.

The company installs wood privacy fences in board-on-board and board-on-batten configurations, vinyl privacy panels, aluminum ornamental fencing, pool enclosures ? approximately 70 percent of aluminum projects involve pool barrier work, where county codes require specific fence heights and self-closing gate hardware on all pool access points ? chain link in galvanized configurations, and ranch fencing for rural properties, including three-board and four-board wire mesh paddock installations. Crusaders Fence also offers a Good Neighbor discount when adjoining property owners coordinate fence installations at the same time, which reduces material handling and labor costs for both households. Financing through a third-party provider is available for homeowners who prefer to spread project costs over time.

Since opening, Crusaders Fence has taken on projects across residential subdivisions in the Fredericksburg metropolitan area as well as on rural and equestrian properties in Culpeper, King George, and surrounding counties. Demand has grown faster than Finn anticipated, with residential neighborhoods, agricultural acreage, and rural properties all accounting for meaningful early volume.

"I've spent years watching what happens when a crew skips the steps that look minor on paper ? a post not set deep enough for clay soil, hardware that isn't rated for outdoor exposure, a footing that can't hold through a freeze. Those jobs come back as repair calls. I started this company because I wanted to build things that hold up and be straight with homeowners about what the job will cost before we ever break ground," said Conall Finn, Owner of Crusaders Fence.
