April 19, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Salmon Wholesale, a company based in New Jersey, has a website up and running. The company announced the launch of their new site, which is dedicated to selling salmon at wholesale prices.

The creator and president of the company, Ernest Epstein, is a senior citizen (77 years young) proving that seniors can be innovators. Epstein states, "We know that this concept will grow as it makes selling and buying wholesale so much easier than ever before."

Epstein states that since salmon is among the most popularly purchased fish, mostly due to its health benefits, he felt that the site was a good way to help businesses to purchase the fish without spending too much.

Epstein calls the business a new means of selling B2B on the internet, with a site that is dedicated to selling only one item, salmon. The site does not belong to just one company, but accumulates offers from the entire salmon industry, with users from all over the world participating. This, Epstein says, makes it easier for businesses to use competitors like Alibaba to their advantage. He states that those searching for wholesale smoked salmon will have a much easier way of finding it.

"The advantage to sellers," the owner says, "is that they get to sell their product. Buyers get to save time by not having to visit so many sites. They can just contact the companies directly to find what they are looking for."

The site is part of the network run by www.foodforsale.com. It is a New Jersey based B2B food sales company that has been in business since 2000. The owner states that he is 77 years young and proves seniors can be relevant in the digital world.

Epstein says that the object is to create a central, worldwide marketplace for selling and buying one item, salmon. It is trustworthy because it is not owned by a seller or buyer, sort of like the stock exchange. The site currently offers only wholesale fresh salmon, but the owner states that he does plan to add additional items in the future.

Business interested in learning more can visit Salmon Wholesale on their newly established website.
