NEWTON, MA - May 21, 2026 -
Company adds outdoor living design consultations and composite deck options for Massachusetts homeowners

All Pro Newton Deck Builders, a custom deck building contractor serving the greater Boston area, announced today an expansion of its deck design and installation services to homeowners in Arlington, Massachusetts. The company now offers on-site design consultations, composite deck construction, and porch installation to Arlington residents seeking to extend their outdoor living space ahead of the 2026 summer season.

The expansion follows a sustained increase in residential outdoor renovation projects across Middlesex County. According to the National Association of Home Builders, outdoor living space additions ranked among the top five home improvement categories in 2025, with deck construction projects generating an average return on investment of 65 percent at resale. All Pro Newton Deck Builders, which has served Newton and surrounding communities for several years, cited growing demand from Arlington homeowners as the driver behind the expanded service coverage. The company offers wood and composite deck options, deck repair and restoration, pergola and shade structure installation, patio and hardscape construction, and pool deck services.

"Arlington homeowners tell us they want a deck or porch that fits their property, their lifestyle, and their budget ? not a one-size-fits-all solution," said John Greene, Owner of All Pro Newton Deck Builders. "Our team lives and works in this area, so we understand New England architecture, the local permitting process, and the weather conditions that materials need to withstand. Every project starts with a free on-site consultation so the homeowner knows exactly what they are getting before any work begins."

All Pro Newton Deck Builders currently serves 17 communities across the greater Boston region, including Newton, Belmont, Brookline, Cambridge, Watertown, Waltham, Medford, Somerville, Wellesley, and Weston. The company provides custom deck design and installation, deck repair and restoration, porch construction, patio and hardscape services, shade structures and pergolas, and pool deck building. Each project includes a detailed consultation process, material selection guidance, and a written estimate at no cost to the homeowner. The company has completed projects ranging from single-level composite decks to multi-story porch installations.

Arlington's residential housing stock, much of which was built between the early 1900s and the 1960s, presents specific structural and aesthetic considerations for deck construction. Many properties in the town feature older foundations, established landscaping, and compact lot sizes that require careful site evaluation before a project can begin. All Pro Newton Deck Builders said its team conducts a full property assessment during each consultation, evaluating soil conditions, existing drainage patterns, proximity to lot lines, and the structural integrity of any surface where a deck or porch will be attached. The company noted that this assessment helps homeowners avoid costly surprises during construction and ensures each project meets local building code requirements in Arlington.

Material selection is a central part of the company's consultation process. Pressure-treated lumber remains the most common choice for homeowners working within a moderate budget, while composite decking materials have gained traction among those seeking lower long-term maintenance costs. Composite boards do not require annual staining or sealing, resist moisture damage, and carry manufacturer warranties that often exceed 25 years. All Pro Newton Deck Builders said it works with both material categories and helps homeowners weigh factors such as upfront cost, expected lifespan, and appearance before making a final selection. The company also installs custom railings, lattice enclosures, and built-in seating as part of its deck design and installation projects.

The company encouraged homeowners considering a new deck or porch to begin the planning process during the spring months, when contractor availability is typically higher, and permitting timelines are shorter. In Massachusetts, most deck construction projects require a building permit from the local municipality, and approval timelines can range from two to six weeks, depending on the scope of the project and the town's review schedule. All Pro Newton Deck Builders said it handles the full permitting process on behalf of its clients, including the preparation of site plans and structural drawings required for submission. The company added that projects initiated in spring and early summer are generally completed before the fall, giving homeowners a full season of use from their new outdoor living space.
