Diamond Soirée Notes Demand for Lab-Grown Diamond Jewelry for Graduation Gifts

May 11, 2026

CHICAGO, IL - May 11, 2026 -
Diamond Soirée has noted increased interest in lab-grown diamond jewelry as options for graduation gifts. As a jewelry store in Chicago, IL, the company offers pieces that incorporate more than 1,000 certified lab-grown diamonds for custom and ready-made designs suitable for marking academic milestones.

Market reports place the global lab-grown diamond market at approximately $29.46 billion in 2025, with projections showing continued expansion in subsequent years. This growth connects to broader consumer interest in materials produced with lower environmental impact relative to traditional diamond mining. Research indicates lab-grown diamonds typically have a significantly smaller carbon footprint, often cited around one-tenth that of mined equivalents, which contributes to their appeal in categories emphasizing responsible sourcing.

Graduation-related spending in the United States reached a projected total of $6.8 billion according to the National Retail Federation survey for the 2025 season, with jewelry listed among established gift categories alongside cash, gift cards, and keepsakes. The average planned expenditure per gift stood at $119.54. Trends for graduation jewelry in recent years have included personalized items such as pendant necklaces, earrings, and bracelets that support everyday wear following the ceremony.

Diamond Soirée maintains an inventory of certified lab-grown diamonds that share identical physical and chemical properties with mined stones. These serve as the basis for necklaces, earrings, rings, bracelets, and bands. The company supports customization that can include details such as initials, birthstones, or specific motifs requested by customers. Custom design turnaround generally averages one and a half weeks from initial consultation to completion.

Pieces valued over $1,000 come with a lifetime warranty that addresses regular polishing and maintenance needs. On-site services for resizing and mending are available, with many resizing jobs completed in under 24 hours, depending on the item. These capabilities form part of the full operational structure that includes diamond production, assembly, and post-purchase support.

Parin Moradiya, Owner of Diamond Soirée, stated, "Graduation represents a transition point where many seek items that combine quality with personal meaning. Lab-grown diamonds provide one avenue for such commemorative pieces within current market parameters."

The showroom operates in Chicago?s historic Jewelers Row district, a designated landmark area known for its concentration of jewelry-related businesses. This setting allows for in-person consultations covering diamond specifications, design options, and service details. The location offers access through multiple CTA lines at the Washington/Wabash station, along with nearby parking facilities.

Secure payment options accommodate both in-store and online transactions. Worldwide delivery is arranged for qualifying orders, with free shipping on purchases over $500 and insured, certified shipments provided as standard. These logistics support families coordinating gifts from outside the immediate Chicago area.

Additional observations from the jewelry sector indicate that younger consumers, including recent graduates, show heightened attention to transparency in sourcing and production methods. Lab-grown diamonds align with these documented preferences by utilizing controlled manufacturing processes rather than extraction. Diamond Soirée integrates this approach across its custom and standard offerings.

Moradiya added, "The availability of certified lab-grown options allows families to select jewelry aligned with both celebratory needs and broader considerations around sourcing and durability."

The company?s model reflects documented industry movements toward ethical materials and customer-specified personalization. Operations span initial diamond creation through finished products and subsequent care, maintaining consistency in handling of certified stones and related services.

Diamond Soirée is a family-operated luxury jewelry store specializing in lab-grown diamonds. The company crafts custom and ready-made pieces using certified stones and ethical materials while operating in Chicago?s historic Jewelers Row district.
