

DWB LAW, LLC Expands Focus on Representation at ALJ Disability Hearings in Miami

May 21, 2026

MIAMI, FL - May 21, 2026 -

DWB LAW, LLC is expanding its representation at Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) disability hearings to support Miami-Dade County residents appealing Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) denials. The firm emphasizes that timely representation at this stage may help claimants better present their medical evidence, testimony, and procedural issues after a prior denial.

Attorney-founder David W. Batchelder leads DWB LAW, LLC, representing disabled workers and children with medically documented impairments that may affect their ability to work. The firm also represents workers from a range of occupations, including police officers, firefighters, nurses, military veterans, and others in physically demanding jobs. He has decades of experience representing claimants in Social Security disability matters.

The firm's renewed focus on ALJ disability hearings in Miami responds to a growing caseload and the procedural complexity of SSDI cases. Because initial disability determinations and reconsideration decisions are generally made without a hearing, the ALJ hearing is often the claimant?s first opportunity to testify and address the evidence directly before the decision-maker.

In this context, an ALJ disability hearing is a proceeding where an administrative law judge reviews medical evidence, work history, and claimant testimony to determine whether the person meets Social Security?s definition of disability. The firm notes this is often the first chance for a claimant to speak directly to the decision-maker, who will evaluate the full record.

The firm points to the number of disability hearings handled in the Miami hearing offices. Administrative law judges in Miami hear cases involving workers from a wide range of backgrounds and occupations. DWB LAW, LLC notes that legal counsel may be especially helpful for claimants facing language barriers, limited education, or other obstacles. Its attorneys handle Social Security disability hearings in Miami and work with Social Security hearing procedures, evidentiary requirements, and scheduling practices.

DWB LAW, LLC explains that legal representation at ALJ hearings can assist claimants with preparation and presentation of their cases, but results depend on the facts of each case and applicable Social Security regulations. At this stage, decisions are based on the complete record, including medical reports, test results, work history, and claimant testimony.

The firm notes that an ALJ hearing is one stage in the Social Security appeals process, which may also include reconsideration, Appeals Council review, and, in some cases, federal court review. DWB LAW, LLC describes the hearing as an important stage where eligibility is reviewed based on the full record and testimony. Other claims may proceed to further review.

DWB LAW, LLC reports that it reviews the disability file, coordinates with medical providers when appropriate, and may prepare post-hearing briefs or submit supplemental evidence when permitted.

The law firm?s updated approach reflects its focus on case screening and preparation for ALJ disability hearings in Miami-Dade County. The firm focuses on cases involving substantial work histories and significant, well-documented impairments, and it aims to pursue claims with sufficient legal and medical support. Its goal is to prepare cases for hearings so that claimants can present their cases clearly and completely, recognizing that eligibility and outcomes are determined by Social Security based on the evidence and applicable law.

DWB LAW, LLC offers complimentary initial consultations for disability claims and appeals.
