Skin Elevé Introduces Exosome-Based Skin Regeneration Treatment in Chatsworth and Surrounding Los Angeles Communities

May 18, 2026

CHATSWORTH, CA - May 18, 2026 -
Skin Elevé, a medical spa located in Chatsworth, California, has announced the introduction of an exosome-based skin regeneration treatment, expanding its range of advanced aesthetic services available to clients across the northwest San Fernando Valley. The service is now accessible to individuals in nearby areas, including Simi Valley, Northridge, Porter Ranch, West Hills, Reseda, and Canoga Park, reflecting the clinic?s ongoing efforts to bring medically guided treatments to a broader population.

The newly introduced treatment centers on exosomes, microscopic extracellular vesicles involved in cell communication and regeneration. In aesthetic applications, these biological components are used to support skin repair, improve texture, and enhance overall skin quality. The treatment is commonly integrated with procedures such as microneedling or applied topically after controlled skin stimulation to encourage absorption and effectiveness.

According to Skin Elevé, the addition of exosome therapy reflects a shift toward regenerative approaches in cosmetic medicine. Rather than focusing solely on surface-level improvements, this method aims to support the skin?s natural repair mechanisms by delivering growth factors and signaling molecules that assist in cellular renewal.

The clinic operates under a medically supervised model, where each client undergoes a consultation before receiving treatment. During this process, practitioners assess factors such as skin condition, medical history, and individual goals to determine whether exosome therapy is appropriate and how it may be incorporated into a personalized care plan.

Avo Topadzhikyan, owner of Skin Elevé, stated that introducing this service aligns with the clinic?s focus on combining clinical oversight with evolving treatment technologies. ?The addition of exosome-based therapy reflects an ongoing commitment to offering treatments that are informed by both medical standards and advancements in aesthetic care,? said Avo Topadzhikyan. ?Each client?s treatment plan is designed with attention to their specific skin needs, and this approach allows for more targeted and gradual improvement.?

Exosome therapy has gained attention in the aesthetic field for its potential to address concerns such as fine lines, uneven texture, and dull skin. By supporting collagen production and cellular turnover, the treatment is often used as part of a broader skin rejuvenation strategy.

At Skin Elevé, the procedure may be combined with microneedling, a technique that creates controlled micro-injuries in the skin to stimulate natural healing responses. When paired with exosomes, this process is intended to enhance absorption and promote deeper penetration of regenerative factors into the skin.

The treatment is considered minimally invasive and generally involves limited recovery time. Clients may experience temporary redness or sensitivity following the procedure, which typically resolves within a short period. As with other aesthetic treatments, results may vary depending on individual skin characteristics and adherence to post-treatment care recommendations.

Medical spa professionals note that regenerative therapies are increasingly being incorporated into long-term skin management plans. These plans often involve a combination of treatments aimed at maintaining skin health over time, rather than relying on single-session results.

Skin Elevé?s approach to aesthetic care emphasizes gradual, natural-looking outcomes supported by consistent follow-up and evaluation. Clients receiving exosome therapy are typically advised on skincare routines and maintenance schedules to support ongoing results.

The expansion of this service into surrounding communities is intended to improve accessibility for individuals seeking advanced aesthetic treatments without requiring travel to more central areas of Los Angeles. The northwest San Fernando Valley has experienced continued residential and commercial growth, driving increased demand for medical spas that offer both clinical oversight and personalized care.

In addition to exosome therapy, Skin Elevé provides a range of services, including laser hair removal, facials, microneedling, lip fillers, and full-face rejuvenation treatments. These services are structured within a framework that prioritizes individualized planning and medically guided procedures.

The clinic operates from its Chatsworth location and schedules treatments by appointment. Each service begins with a consultation to ensure that clients receive accurate information about treatment expectations, potential outcomes, and any relevant considerations based on their skin type or medical background.

Industry observers note that regenerative treatments, such as exosome therapy, are a growing area within aesthetic medicine, particularly among individuals seeking non-surgical options that support long-term skin quality. While research in this area continues to evolve, clinics are increasingly incorporating these techniques into their offerings as part of comprehensive skincare strategies.

Mary Bilbulyan emphasized that maintaining consistency in treatment standards remains a priority as new services are introduced. ?Every treatment offered at the clinic follows the same structured approach, from consultation through follow-up,? Mary Bilbulyan said. ?The goal is to provide care that is measured, appropriate, and aligned with each client?s long-term skin goals.?

Skin Elevé is located at 10316 CA-27 #B, Chatsworth, CA 91311, and provides medical aesthetic services to clients throughout the surrounding Los Angeles communities. Appointments for exosome therapy and other treatments can be scheduled directly through the clinic.
