

DataMasters Launches Expanded RV Mailing List Database to Support Targeted Outreach to RV Owners Across the US

May 27, 2026

FLOWER MOUND, TX - May 27, 2026 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

With summer 2026 underway and recreational vehicle travel at its seasonal high across the United States, DataMasters, a direct marketing data company based in Flower Mound, Texas, has announced the launch of an expanded RV mailing list database intended to give businesses broader access to verified recreational vehicle owner data for direct mail campaigns.

Recreational vehicle ownership represents one of the largest and most defined consumer segments in the United States. Millions of Americans are registered owners of some form of recreational vehicle, including motorhomes, travel trailers, fifth wheels, campers, and popup units. The summer months mark the period of highest RV activity, as owners travel to campgrounds, national parks, and other destinations across the country. For businesses whose products and services are relevant to this demographic, access to current and accurate RV owner lists is a practical necessity for running direct mail campaigns that reach the intended audience.

"Having an expanded database means businesses can build a more complete rv mailing list that reflects the full scope of the RV market in their target area," said David Rickenbacher, owner of DataMasters. "That kind of accuracy is what determines whether a direct mail campaign reaches the right people."

The DataMasters RV mailing list database is compiled primarily from point-of-sale transaction data and supplemented with government data maintained in compliance with all applicable federal and state laws. The database is updated regularly to preserve accuracy and deliverability. Businesses can request counts by state and county before placing an order, giving campaign planners access to audience size information for any geographic target area prior to committing to a list purchase.

Selection criteria available through the DataMasters rv owner lists include recreational vehicle class, covering Class A, Class B, and Class C motorhomes, as well as specific vehicle types such as travel trailers, fifth wheels, campers, and motorhomes across various configurations. Geographic targeting can be defined by zip code, radius, county, or state. Year range filtering is also available, allowing businesses to identify owners of vehicles within a specific age range, which is relevant for companies whose offerings correspond to particular points in a vehicle's ownership cycle.

RV dealerships represent one of the most straightforward applications of RV owner lists, using the data to reach current owners with information about new inventory, service availability, and trade-in programs. Insurance providers that offer recreational vehicle policies use verified owner data to identify prospective policyholders within their licensed service areas. Campgrounds, RV parks, and tourism-related businesses near outdoor destinations use rv mailing lists to communicate seasonal availability to travelers during the summer planning period. Companies that sell RV accessories, parts, towing equipment, and storage products also rely on owner lists to direct their outreach toward a confirmed audience of recreational vehicle owners rather than a broader consumer pool.

The connection between RV ownership and outdoor recreation extends the relevance of RV owner lists beyond businesses directly tied to the recreational vehicle industry. Sporting goods retailers and outdoor outfitters that sell fishing, hunting, and camping equipment frequently find RV owners to be a receptive audience given the documented overlap between RV travel and participation in outdoor activities. Companies that offer GPS navigation systems, satellite internet and television services, and portable power and off-grid technology products also market to RV owners with regularity, as these products address specific needs common among long-distance and full-time recreational vehicle travelers. Auto dealerships that sell full-size trucks and other vehicles capable of towing large trailers represent another category of business that uses RV owner data to identify prospective buyers.

DataMasters works with clients to develop customized rv mailing lists and rv owner lists based on each business's targeting requirements, geographic scope, and campaign objectives. Direct marketing specialists assist clients through the process from initial count requests to final list delivery. The company also offers email list development and additional marketing solutions for businesses seeking to reach RV owners across more than one channel.

All data products offered by DataMasters are maintained in compliance with applicable federal and state laws governing the collection and use of consumer and vehicle owner information.
