The Disability Guys Announces Work Accident Lawyer Update

May 27, 2026

May 27, 2026 -
Markhoff & Mittman, P.C., also known as The Disability Guys, has announced a work accident lawyer information update for injured workers in Yonkers, New York, in May 2026 to clarify how workplace injury claims are reviewed under New York workers? compensation procedures. The update addresses common filing considerations following job-related accidents and provides neutral information about documentation, hearings, and claim status reviews.

?The purpose of this update is to provide clearer information about the steps that may follow a workplace injury claim and the records that may be relevant during review,? said Brian Mittman, Esq., Managing Partner of The Disability Guys. ?The firm continues to publish information that reflects the procedural issues injured workers often encounter in workers? compensation matters.?

The Disability Guys operates as Markhoff & Mittman, P.C., a law firm focused on workers? compensation and Social Security Disability matters in New York. The firm maintains resources about workplace accident claims, including injuries involving construction sites, repetitive stress, transportation incidents, falls, and other job-related events.

A workplace accident claim may involve notice to an employer, medical documentation, claim forms, insurance review, and hearings before the New York State Workers? Compensation Board. The firm?s update explains that records such as incident reports, treatment notes, wage information, and work status documentation may become part of the administrative review process.

Workers? compensation matters can involve questions about whether an injury arose during employment, whether medical treatment is related to the reported accident, and whether wage replacement benefits apply. In disputed cases, additional medical evaluations, testimony, or administrative review may be required before a determination is issued.

The Disability Guys states that its informational materials are intended to describe the general process rather than predict outcomes in individual matters. The firm?s work accident lawyer update also notes that timelines may vary based on medical treatment, claim disputes, employer or carrier responses, and hearing schedules.

The update includes information about Yonkers-area workplace injury matters while avoiding a location-only focus. The firm notes that workplace accident claims are governed by statewide procedures, and similar documentation issues may arise for workers in different industries across New York.

Brian Mittman, Esq. is listed by the firm as Managing Partner and has published information on workers?compensation and disability-related legal topics. The firm?s materials describe its focus on injured workers and disability claimants, including matters involving workers? compensation claims and Social Security Disability claims.

The Disability Guys also provides educational content related to claim preparation, hearings, medical evidence, and disability benefits. These materials identify common procedural steps, including filing requirements, benefit classifications, and administrative review issues that can arise after a workplace accident.

The firm?s latest update reflects continued public interest in how workplace accident claims are handled when medical treatment, lost wages, and claim disputes intersect. The announcement also places the work accident lawyer topic within the broader context of administrative claims, employer reporting, insurance carrier review, and ongoing discussions regarding workplace injury procedures and employee access to benefits under New York workers? compensation regulations. The firm noted that procedural requirements and documentation standards may continue to evolve as workplace injury claims remain an active area of review within administrative and legal systems throughout the state.
