BoxKing is drawing attention to its board game table collection which is designed around the many ways to play board games on a tabletop. The collection focuses on real tabletop play styles, from long-form RPG campaigns and miniature battles to trading card games and casual strategy nights. In addition, BoxKing's collection of board game tables is designed to function as everyday furniture during family game nights as well as to be set up and taken down in smaller spaces such as apartments and homes with smaller living rooms.

Rather than treating all tabletop gamers as one audience, BoxKing organizes its tabletop collection around practical use cases that help gamers find the right table for their needs.

BoxKing's products for tabletop gamers can be grouped into categories based on several different themes, but one of the main themes is flexibility. BoxKing's tables and extensions use the company's Ironside 2.0

system, which is a modular framework designed to form the basis of a variety of different gaming tables. For example, the Ironside 2.0 Upgrade Extension Pack can be used to extend the length of an Ironside 2.0 table by two feet. This helps gamers who run long campaigns or need more room for maps, miniatures, rule books, and accessories. The Multi-table Connector Pack allows gamers to join two compatible tables into a larger playing surface.

BoxKing positions the Ironside Extension as a solution for tabletop RPG players who need more room for larger campaigns, maps, miniatures, and accessories.

BoxKing also demonstrates how different table sizes can support different gaming communities. For example, its Kingswood 4'x6' model is positioned for miniature-heavy games such as Warhammer, where extra table space matters for terrain layouts, movement, and army organization. Meanwhile, the Kingswood 3'x5' model is presented as a strong fit for trading card games such as Magic: The Gathering, Pokémon, and Yu-Gi-Oh.

This size-based approach helps gamers move beyond the generic idea of buying a game table and instead focus on what actually fits their game nights. A large miniature wargamer table, a small table for Trading Card Games, or a modular, expandable table for all possible situations ? the selection at BoxKing offers a range of table formats built for different styles of play.

The collection also speaks to players who need a table to work in a real home, not just a dedicated game room. Several models are designed to transition between dining and gaming use, making them easier to integrate into family rooms, apartments, and shared spaces.

The Versatile Coffee Table is linked to board and strategy games like Catan, Gloomhaven, Carcassonne and Splendor. Instead of treating a coffee-table format as a compromise, the Versatile Coffee Table is the perfect choice for players who need a game surface in smaller rooms or in casual settings with friends and family. Also, the other coffee tables by BoxKing are flexible and help gamers maintain a clean, functional living space without giving up dedicated tabletop features.

The Ironside lineup continues to grow with the introduction of the HEX Game Table. This unique HEX shaped table is designed to give each player equal access to the center, placing them all at the very center of the action. With a dedicated playing surface, wall protection and removable topper, HEX is the perfect solution for social gamers, the poker enthusiast and family friendly games alike. The design balances comfort, accessibility, and style for a more social tabletop experience.

According to BoxKing, the goal of the collection is to help players choose a table format that matches the way they actually play. These surfaces can be a playing area that can be expanded while a campaign is in full swing, a larger playing surface for your miniatures, a high quality playing surface made from the premium wooden gaming surfaces to play your TCG games upon, or a compact playing surface that can be played upon over a coffee table to name but a few examples. This range of tables really illustrates the way in which most gamers play.

For players exploring modular or game-specific tabletop setups, BoxKing's board game table collection serves as the central hub for the company's full lineup.
