

Cestari Founder Publishes Personal List of Five Essential Kitchen Tools for Serious Home Cooks

LITTLETON, MA - June 08, 2026 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Susan MacDowell, founder of premium kitchen tools brand Cestari, has published her personal selection of five essential kitchen tools that every serious home cook should own, detailing specific reasons for each choice based on durability, daily use, gift potential, and impact on finished dishes.

The list presents five carefully selected pieces sold by Cestari: a 5/8" bamboo cutting board described as the daily workhorse, the Cestari Ultimate Pasta Machine with its patented suction base for fresh pasta done well, a set of glass food storage jars for pantry staples, chalkboard pantry labels for a system that survives a restock, and a quality ceramic pizza cutter that serves many uses.

"These five tools represent the pieces I reach for multiple times each week in my own kitchen," said Susan MacDowell, Founder of Cestari. "The bamboo board handles everything from vegetable prep to bread slicing, the pasta machine's suction base means I can roll sheets alone without assistance, the storage jars keep ingredients visible and fresh, the labels eliminate the guesswork after restocking, and the pizza cutter can cut pasta as well as pizza."

MacDowell selected each tool based on specific criteria developed through years of cooking and product development. The bamboo cutting board earned its place as the foundation piece that withstands daily knife work without showing wear. The Cestari Ultimate Pasta Machine made the list for its patented suction base that eliminates the stability issues common with traditional pasta makers. The glass food storage jars were chosen for their dual purpose as both functional storage and thoughtful gifts that serious cooks appreciate. The chalkboard pantry labels provide an organizational system that adapts to changing pantry contents without requiring replacement. The pizza cutter completes the selection for its ability to create clean, professional edges on filled pasta that prevent leakage during cooking.

The list reflects current trends in home cooking toward investing in versatile, durable tools rather than following every kitchen gadget trend. MacDowell's approach emphasizes tools that earn their place through repeated use rather than occasional specialty applications.

The company shares more info and other insights in a weekly newsletter from the Cestari founder. This weekly cooking newsletter combines tool recommendations with recipes that demonstrate practical applications. The newsletter format allows for detailed explanations of how each tool functions within the context of actual meal preparation.

The publication targets serious home cooks who already own basic equipment and seek strategic additions to their kitchens. This demographic prioritizes purchasing fewer, better items rather than accumulating single-purpose gadgets.

Reader requests for guidance on building a focused, functional kitchen prompted the founder to share this specific list. Each piece solves a real problem - the cutting board that lasts for years, the pasta machine that works solo, the jars that organize and display, the labels that evolve with your cooking, and the cutter that elevates presentation.

Cestari specializes in pasta-making equipment and kitchen organization solutions, with products available as premium kitchen tools on Amazon and through specialty retailers. The company, founded in 2014, develops tools designed for repeated daily use, each backed by lifetime guarantees. The brand focuses on creating pieces that integrate into regular cooking routines, with particular emphasis on pasta-making tools and kitchen organization systems.
