Evergreen Landscape Pros Expands Landscape Design Services in Galisteo, NM

June 25, 2026

SANTA FE, NM - June 25, 2026 -
Full-service landscaping now available to Galisteo Basin-area homeowners and commercial property owners through a locally experienced team.

Evergreen Landscape Pros, a full-service landscape design and installation company based in Santa Fe, New Mexico, has announced the formal expansion of its gardening and landscaping services in Galisteo, NM, bringing professional design, hardscape construction, irrigation management, and native plant installation to residential and commercial properties throughout the Galisteo Basin area. The company serves properties ranging from residential gardens to large-scale commercial developments across the northern New Mexico region.

Galisteo, a historically rich community whose roots trace to Paleo Indian settlements dating to approximately 7500 B.C. and later to Spanish colonial settlement in the 1700s, presents a distinctive landscape environment shaped by high-desert grasslands, the adjacent Galisteo Basin Preserve, and the region's well-documented drought and water-scarcity challenges. Evergreen Landscape Pros brings a service portfolio calibrated to these conditions, offering landscape design and installation, hardscape and stonework, patios, portals and walkways, irrigation and water management systems, and fencing solutions in coyote, latilla, cedar, and stone styles ? each adapted to the demands of the high-desert climate rather than transplanted from lower-elevation or higher-rainfall regions.

"Our work in the Galisteo area reflects what this landscape actually is," said a representative of Evergreen Landscape Pros. "Clients here are living near the Galisteo Basin Preserve, surrounded by grasslands and wildlife, and they want outdoor spaces that feel like they belong to this place ? not something that fights the climate every season. We work from that starting point and design around the land, not against it."

The availability of professional landscape design and installation services in Galisteo addresses a documented gap in the local market, as the community's smaller population and proximity to Santa Fe have historically limited access to full-spectrum landscaping contractors willing to serve the area. Evergreen Landscape Pros, which maintains an established client base throughout Santa Fe County and surrounding communities including Espanola, Lamy, Pecos, Tesuque, and White Rock, brings the same scope of services that larger Santa Fe-area properties receive to Galisteo-area clients. The company's irrigation and water management division is particularly relevant in a region that the Galisteo Basin Preserve itself has identified as subject to drought conditions that can restrict water availability for area residents.

Northern New Mexico's high-desert environment presents a set of landscape challenges that differ significantly from those found in other parts of the country. Galisteo sits at an elevation of roughly 5,800 feet, where intense UV exposure, low annual precipitation, wide temperature swings between seasons, and caliche-heavy soils can stress or kill plant material that has not been selected and installed with local conditions in mind. Compounding these factors, the region experiences periodic wildfire risk and erosion along arroyos and drainage channels that cross many residential properties. Landscape plans that do not account for water runoff management, soil stabilization, and fire-wise plant selection can create costly problems for property owners over time. Evergreen Landscape Pros designs each project around these site-specific realities from the initial consultation forward.

Among the services most in demand in the Galisteo area are hardscape and stonework installations, including retaining walls, decorative rock features, and flagstone patios and walkways that integrate with the region's natural adobe and stone aesthetic. The company's team constructs portals ? the covered outdoor living structures traditional to northern New Mexico architecture ? as well as formal walkways connecting living spaces to gardens and outbuildings. These hardscape elements serve both functional and aesthetic purposes: properly engineered retaining walls manage slope erosion and redirect water away from structures, while stone patios and portals extend usable living space outdoors during Galisteo's mild spring and fall seasons without placing additional water demand on already-scarce resources.

Irrigation and fencing round out Evergreen Landscape Pros' service offering for Galisteo clients. The company installs, repairs, and maintains drip and low-flow irrigation systems engineered to deliver water efficiently to root zones while minimizing surface evaporation ? a critical consideration in a region where water conservation is both an environmental and a practical necessity. On the fencing side, the company works in materials historically used throughout northern New Mexico, including coyote fencing, latilla panels, cedar, and stone, each of which provides security and property definition while maintaining visual compatibility with the region's rural character. Together, these services allow Galisteo homeowners and commercial property managers to develop functional, water-responsible outdoor environments that require less intervention season to season.
