Newton Deck Builders Begins 2026 Pergola Installation Season

July 06, 2026

NEWTON, MA - July 06, 2026 -
Deck contractor is scheduling shade structure and patio cover installations ahead of peak summer demand.

Newton Deck Builders has opened its 2026 schedule for pergola installation, shade structures and patio covers across its Massachusetts service area. The company is booking design consultations and installation slots now, as homeowners across Greater Boston prepare their yards for the warmer months.

Demand for shaded outdoor living continues to rise. According to the National Association of Home Builders, 65% of new U.S. homes built in 2024 included at least one outdoor living structure, up from 48% in 2019. Newton Deck Builders offers new pergola and patio cover builds, shade structure repair, and renovations or material upgrades, working in cedar, redwood, pressure-treated pine, vinyl, aluminum and steel so each outdoor living space fits a homeowner's design and budget.

"Homeowners here want to use their yards for more of the year, and a well-built pergola or patio cover is one of the more affordable ways to do that," said John Greene, Owner of Newton Deck Builders. "Our team reviews materials and layout with each family before any work begins, because the goal is a structure that suits the house and holds up for years."

The company builds across more than a dozen communities in the Greater Boston area and also offers combined patio-and-shade and deck-and-porch packages for larger outdoor renovations. The activity reflects a broader market shift: the U.S. outdoor living structures market is projected to reach USD 1.22 billion by 2030, growing at a compound annual rate of 5.3%, according to Grand View Research.

Within that category, pergolas and patio structures account for the largest share of spending. Grand View Research attributes their lead to comparatively low maintenance and durability, along with a footprint that suits backyard dining and gatherings.

Design preferences have shifted as well. Industry reports describe growing interest in adjustable louvered roofs, integrated lighting and retractable covers that extend how long a structure stays usable through the year. Newton Deck Builders builds to custom dimensions and finishes and reviews design options with homeowners alongside more traditional fixed-roof structures.

The category has also been reshaped by lower-cost options. Future Market Insights estimates that prefabricated kit systems now account for roughly 40% of unit sales, at prices 30% to 50% below custom-built equivalents. Contractor-built structures remain common where a yard's grade, an existing deck or a roofline calls for a design fitted to the site rather than an off-the-shelf footprint.

Outdoor structures in New England also face conditions that shape both engineering and materials. Permanent pergolas and patio covers in Massachusetts are typically designed to carry winter snow loads and to withstand repeated freeze-and-thaw cycles, which is one reason builders specify pressure-treated wood, aluminum or steel for posts and framing. Permanent structures often require local permitting, and Newton Deck Builders reviews those requirements during each project's planning stage.

Spring and early-summer booking windows tend to fill quickly, which is why the company is setting its installation calendar now rather than at the start of the season. "We would rather plan a project properly than rush it once the warm weather arrives," said Greene. "Opening the schedule early gives families time to settle on materials and a layout, and it lets our crews sequence the work across the summer."
