Danville Music Expands Guitar Lessons Program with Focus on Fender Electric Guitar Instruction

June 18, 2026

Danville, California - June 18, 2026 -
Danville Music, a premier musical instrument store serving the San Francisco Bay Area since 1989, announces the expansion of its guitar instruction program with enhanced focus on Fender electric guitar training for students at all skill levels. The Danville-based music store combines its extensive Fender inventory with expert instruction from professional session musicians to create a comprehensive learning environment for aspiring guitarists.

The expanded program leverages the store's growing collection of Fender electric guitars Danville Music has assembled, which now includes over 95 models ranging from entry-level Stratocasters to Custom Shop instruments. Students enrolled in the lesson program gain direct access to test and experience the same professional-grade instruments they learn on, creating a unique educational advantage not typically found at larger retail chains.

"When students learn on quality Fender instruments from day one, they experience better tone, improved playability, and faster technical development," said Adam Schuman, co-owner and guitar instructor at Danville Music since 1996. "Our approach combines expert instruction with access to professional-level instruments, which helps students stay motivated and progress more quickly than they would with inferior equipment or limited instrument selection."

The guitar lesson program at Danville Music features instructors with extensive professional experience, including session work for major corporate clients. Schuman himself has performed on advertising campaigns for Microsoft, T-Mobile, and Salesforce, bringing real-world performance expertise to the classroom. This professional background enables instructors to teach not just technique, but also the practical skills needed for recording, live performance, and professional music production.

The store's teaching philosophy emphasizes hands-on experience with various Fender models, allowing students to discover which instrument best suits their playing style and musical goals. Whether students are interested in the classic tones of a Telecaster for country music, the versatility of a Stratocaster for rock and blues, or the distinctive sound of a Jazzmaster for alternative genres, instructors can demonstrate techniques on the actual instruments available in the showroom.

Private lessons are tailored to individual skill levels, from complete beginners learning their first chords to advanced players refining their technique or exploring new styles. The curriculum covers fundamental skills including chord progressions, scales, music theory, and sight-reading, while also incorporating contemporary techniques such as effects pedal usage, recording basics, and performance preparation.

The integration of retail and education services distinguishes the store's approach from both standalone music schools and big-box retailers. Students benefit from immediate access to professional setup services, ensuring their instruments are properly adjusted for optimal playability, along with ongoing support for equipment selection as their skills develop.

Danville Music has served the Tri-Valley region for over three decades, establishing itself as a trusted resource for musicians throughout Northern California. Under the ownership of Adam Schuman and Cameron Brochier since 2021, the store continues to expand its services while maintaining its commitment to personalized instruction and professional-grade equipment. The store carries instruments from leading manufacturers including PRS, Gibson, Suhr, Tom Anderson, Duesenberg, Music Man, and Taylor, in addition to its extensive Fender collection.
