

Skin Elevé Expands Facial Treatment Services Across Northwest San Fernando Valley Communities

June 17, 2026

CHATSWORTH, CA - June 17, 2026 -

Skin Elevé, a medical spa based in Chatsworth, California, has announced the expanded availability of its facial treatment services to additional communities throughout the northwest San Fernando Valley. The development extends access to residents in Simi Valley, Northridge, Porter Ranch, West Hills, Reseda, and Canoga Park, reflecting continued demand for professionally guided skin care services in the region.

The facial treatments offered by Skin Elevé are designed to support skin maintenance, address common dermatological concerns, and improve overall skin appearance through a structured and individualized approach. These treatments are performed within a clinical setting and are typically preceded by a consultation that evaluates skin condition, lifestyle factors, and long-term goals.

Facial procedures at the clinic incorporate a range of techniques, including cleansing, exfoliation, hydration, and targeted applications of clinical-grade skincare products. Depending on the client's needs, treatments may also integrate advanced technologies or methods intended to support collagen production, improve texture, and address issues such as uneven tone, congestion, or signs of aging.

The expansion of these services comes at a time when interest in non-invasive skin care treatments continues to rise. Industry data indicates that many individuals are seeking professional treatments that complement at-home routines, particularly those that offer consistent maintenance and gradual improvement rather than immediate, short-term changes.

Mary Bilbulyan, owner of Skin Elev  , stated that the broader availability of facial services is intended to provide structured, medically guided care to a wider population within the surrounding communities.

 Facial treatments are often part of a long-term approach to maintaining skin health,  said Mary Bilbulyan.  By expanding access, more individuals can receive treatments that are based on professional assessment and tailored to their specific skin conditions. 

The clinic s approach to facial care emphasizes customization. Each session is adjusted based on the client s current skin condition, which may change due to environmental factors, hormonal fluctuations, or lifestyle habits. This adaptability allows practitioners to modify techniques and products during each visit, rather than relying on a fixed treatment protocol.

Common concerns addressed through facial treatments include acne, dehydration, dullness, enlarged pores, and early signs of aging. Treatments are structured to support the skin s natural barrier while promoting renewal through controlled exfoliation and hydration techniques. In some cases, facials may also serve as a preparatory or complementary step for other aesthetic procedures, such as microneedling or laser-based treatments.

Skin Elev   operates under a medically supervised framework, with procedures performed by trained professionals following established clinical protocols. This includes adherence to sanitation standards, proper use of approved products, and detailed documentation of each treatment session.

The clinic environment is designed to provide a controlled setting for aesthetic procedures, allowing practitioners to focus on both safety and consistency. Appointments are scheduled in advance, and each visit typically includes an assessment to determine whether adjustments to the treatment plan are necessary.

As part of the expanded service rollout, Skin Elev   continues to emphasize the role of education in skin care. Clients receiving facial treatments are often provided with guidance on maintaining results between visits, including recommendations for skincare routines and product use tailored to their individual skin type.

The demand for professional facial treatments has grown alongside increased awareness of skin health and preventative care. Many individuals now view these treatments as part of a broader wellness routine, rather than occasional or event-based services. This shift has contributed to a steady increase in the utilization of medical spa services across suburban areas within Los Angeles County.

The northwest San Fernando Valley, in particular, has experienced ongoing residential development and population growth, which has influenced the expansion of service-based businesses in the area. Access to local aesthetic clinics is increasingly important to residents seeking consistent, convenient care.

In addition to facial treatments, Skin Elevé offers a range of aesthetic services that may be incorporated into a comprehensive skin care plan. These include microneedling, laser-based procedures, and injectable treatments, all of which are structured around individualized treatment planning.

The introduction of expanded facial services is intended to complement these offerings by providing foundational care that supports skin preparation and maintenance. Practitioners often consider facial treatments as a baseline component of long-term skin management strategies.

Mary Bilbulyan noted that maintaining consistency in treatment quality remains a priority as services become more widely available.

“Each client receives the same level of attention and evaluation regardless of the service,” Mary Bilbulyan said. “Facial treatments are approached with the same level of detail as any other procedure, with a focus on achieving outcomes that are appropriate for the individual.”

Skin Elevé’s primary location in Chatsworth serves as the central hub for consultations and treatments. The clinic operates by appointment and continues to follow a consultation-first model, ensuring that each client receives a thorough assessment before undergoing any procedure.

The expansion of facial services across neighboring communities reflects broader trends in the aesthetic industry, where demand for non-invasive, maintenance-focused treatments continues to grow. As individuals seek ways to manage skin health over time, clinics are adapting their service offerings to align with evolving expectations.

Skin Elevé remains positioned in this landscape as a provider of medically guided aesthetic treatments, emphasizing individualized care and structured treatment planning. Appointments for facial services and consultations are available through the clinic’s scheduling system.
