June 19, 2026 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

JHL Pools ? Newtown Square has announced the availability of its custom inground pool installation services through its Newtown Square operations, providing homeowners with access to design and construction services for residential swimming pools. The announcement reflects the company's ongoing pool construction activities and its continued focus on managing projects through an in-house construction team.

?Each pool project involves site-specific planning, engineering considerations, permitting requirements, and construction coordination,? said TJ Warner, Owner of JHL Pools. ?Our team manages these stages directly so that homeowners have a single point of accountability throughout the installation process.?

The availability of custom inground pool installation services comes as homeowners continue to invest in outdoor living environments that support recreation and gathering spaces on residential properties. Pool construction projects typically require coordination among designers, excavation crews, equipment installers, inspectors, and finishing specialists. JHL Pools has stated that its construction process is managed internally from initial planning through project completion.

Founded more than 20 years ago, JHL Pools designs and builds custom inground pools for residential properties throughout southeastern Pennsylvania. The company conducts design consultations, site evaluations, excavation activities, structural construction, plumbing installation, equipment setup, interior finishing, and project completion services. According to the company, these functions are performed by members of its own construction team rather than being assigned to multiple outside contractors.

The company indicated that site conditions are evaluated before project designs are finalized. Factors such as soil composition, drainage patterns, property grade, and construction access are reviewed during the planning phase. These evaluations are intended to inform engineering and construction decisions associated with each installation.

Pool construction in the region presents unique considerations due to varying soil conditions and seasonal weather patterns. Clay soils, rock formations, groundwater management requirements, and freeze-thaw cycles can influence both design and construction methods. JHL Pools stated that structural reinforcement and drainage planning are incorporated into project specifications based on site conditions identified during the evaluation process.

The company offers a range of finishing materials and equipment options that may be incorporated into custom projects. Available interior finish selections include Pebble Tec, quartz aggregate, and Diamond Brite surfaces. Homeowners may also select from glass and ceramic waterline tile options, as well as lighting, heating, and automation systems manufactured by Hayward.

In addition to construction activities, the company coordinates permitting and inspection requirements associated with residential pool projects. Local permitting processes can involve multiple reviews and inspections before a pool is approved for operation. JHL Pools stated that permit applications, inspection scheduling, and startup guidance are included as part of its project management process.

The announcement also reflects broader interest in outdoor residential improvements that combine recreation, landscape design, and property enhancement. Custom pools are frequently integrated with patios, outdoor kitchens, hardscape elements, and other exterior living features. Project planning often requires coordination among multiple construction disciplines to align design objectives with site conditions and regulatory requirements.

JHL Pools operates from 12 Smedley Lane in Newtown Square and continues to provide pool design and construction services throughout the surrounding region. The company reports that its project portfolio includes custom residential pool installations completed over more than two decades of operation.
