STM Trucks & Machinery Notes Rising Demand for Compact Equipment

June 25, 2026

June 25, 2026 -
STM Trucks & Machinery has been serving operators across New South Wales for more than 50 years. The family-owned dealership reports growing interest from tradies and landscapers in compact machinery options suited to tight-access sites, confined job conditions, and smaller-scale operational requirements.

The trend reflects the practical realities of residential construction and landscaping work across the state. As development continues on smaller urban and suburban lots, operators are regularly working in conditions where full-size equipment presents significant logistical challenges. Confined driveways, narrow access points, and the need to work in close proximity to existing structures or established vegetation are among the factors making compact machinery an increasingly suitable choice for operators across these sectors. For landscaping crews in particular, the ability to work on soft or sloped ground without causing unnecessary surface damage has become a key consideration when selecting equipment.

Compact track loaders and telehandlers have emerged as practical solutions to these on-site demands. Track loaders are commonly deployed for earthmoving, site clearing, levelling, and material handling tasks on tight residential sites. Telehandlers offer flexible lifting and loading capability that translates well across varied terrain and a broad range of applications. Both machine categories are built to hold up in the physically demanding and variable conditions that tradies and landscapers encounter throughout the working day.

"We have been seeing more inquiries from tradies and landscapers who are specifically looking at compact options," said a spokesperson for STM Trucks & Machinery. "The ASV track loaders and Merlo telehandlers we carry are designed for confined access work and are regularly used on residential sites and landscaping jobs where larger equipment cannot operate."

The company has been has been supplying trucks and machinery trucks and machinery supplier to operators across New South Wales for over five decades. It has accumulated experience across a broad range of truck and machinery applications over that time, serving operators from independent tradies through to established construction businesses. As a family-owned business, the company has developed long-standing working relationships with tradies, landscapers, and construction operators throughout New South Wales. STM Trucks & Machinery maintains an inventory of both new and pre-owned machinery, with parts supply and workshop services available across its full range.

"The question we hear most from operators considering compact machinery is where to start," the spokesperson added. "The answer depends entirely on the work they are doing. A compact track loader that suits a landscaping crew on residential sites may not be the right choice for a contractor on a larger commercial project. Taking the time to understand the job before recommending the machine has always been central to the way we operate."

For operators who depend on their equipment to keep jobs on schedule, service and parts support carries as much weight as the machine selection itself. STM's workshop operates six days a week and handles servicing for heavy vehicles. The company provides 24-hour emergency support for operators facing unexpected breakdowns in the field and maintains a parts inventory covering genuine and aftermarket options for its machinery brands. Parts orders are handled through STM's dedicated parts team, with delivery running twice daily across Metropolitan Sydney and extending to the Southern Highlands and Wollongong each afternoon.

STM Trucks & Machinery operates across three locations in New South Wales, including its main depot in Smeaton Grange and additional branches in Queanbeyan West and Unanderra.
