

South Shore Home Remodel Outlines Expanded Remodeling Services to Quincy

August 03, 2026

QUINCY, MA - August 03, 2026 -

South Shore Home Remodel, a residential contracting firm led by owner Bob Dougherty, has outlined an expanded scope of remodeling services now available to homeowners in Quincy, Massachusetts and adjacent South Shore communities. The offering covers kitchen renovations, bathroom renovations, whole-home remodels, additions, and finished basement projects delivered by the firm's in-house crews.

The initiative addresses sustained remodeling demand across the South Shore region, where a significant share of the residential housing stock predates 1980. Older homes in Quincy and neighboring towns frequently require structural updates, code-driven electrical and plumbing work, and modernization of kitchens and bathrooms, according to figures published by the United States Census Bureau in its American Community Survey estimates for Norfolk County. Homes built before 1978 also carry lead-paint disclosure and abatement considerations under federal Environmental Protection Agency rules, which can shape scopes involving surface preparation.

South Shore Home Remodel serves owner-occupied single-family and multi-family properties throughout Quincy and nearby communities, including Milton, Braintree, Weymouth, and Hingham. The firm handles project management, permitting coordination with municipal building departments, framing, finish carpentry, tiling, and cabinetry through directly employed tradespeople rather than a subcontracted model for primary trades. That structure allows scheduling decisions to be made internally rather than negotiated across independent crews.

"The expanded scope reflects requests coming in from Quincy homeowners who want a single point of accountability across design, permitting, and construction," said Bob Dougherty, owner of South Shore Home Remodel. "Consolidating trades under one roof shortens timelines and clarifies communication for families living through a renovation."

Kitchen renovations account for a significant portion of project inquiries received by the firm, with typical projects addressing layout reconfiguration, cabinetry replacement, countertop installation, appliance integration, and lighting. Bathroom renovations follow closely, often involving plumbing rerouting, waterproofing, tile installation, and accessibility features for older residents choosing to age in place. Basement finish projects have also increased in frequency as remote-work arrangements have driven demand for dedicated home-office space.

Whole-home remodels and additions represent a smaller but growing category, driven in part by the tight inventory in the Greater Boston housing market. Data published by the National Association of Home Builders indicate that remodeling activity has held relatively steady even during periods when new-construction starts have declined, a pattern consistent with inquiry volume reported by contractors serving the South Shore corridor.

Quincy, a city of approximately 101,000 on the South Shore according to the 2020 decennial census, contains a mix of Victorian-era homes, mid-century Cape Cod and ranch styles, and more recent construction. The city's proximity to Boston and access to the MBTA Red Line have supported steady owner-occupied investment, a factor cited in municipal planning documents produced by the City of Quincy.

Projects handled by South Shore Home Remodel typically begin with an on-site consultation, followed by design development, a fixed-price proposal, and coordination with the Quincy Inspectional Services Department or the equivalent office in the applicable municipality. Timelines vary by scope, with bathroom projects generally running four to six weeks and kitchen renovations or additions extending several months. Material lead times, historic review in select neighborhoods, and utility coordination can also affect the overall schedule.

"Homeowners in Quincy are asking sharper questions about scope, warranty, and licensing than a decade ago," Dougherty said. "Transparent information about what a remodel actually involves has become a threshold expectation for the market."

Dougherty added that scheduling for the coming construction season has begun and that consultations are being booked in advance to accommodate the compressed calendar imposed by New England winters. Homeowners considering a project can review the full description of remodeling services, service area, and general project sequencing offered by the firm. Contractors performing this work in Massachusetts operate under Home Improvement Contractor registration issued by the state's Office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation.
