July 07, 2026 -

McDougall Law Firm, LLC is pleased to announce a $1,200,000 settlement on behalf of a client who suffered serious personal injuries in an accident on a South Carolina construction site.

The settlement reflects the firm's commitment to pursuing full and fair compensation for injured workers and accident victims, and demonstrates the significant recoveries that become possible when an experienced personal injury attorney identifies and pursues every available avenue of liability. Construction sites are among the most dangerous work environments in the country.

Workers and others present on active construction sites face exposure to heavy equipment, unstable structures, inadequate safety measures, and conditions that can cause catastrophic injuries in an instant. When those injuries result from the negligence of a property owner, general contractor, subcontractor, equipment manufacturer, or any other responsible party, South Carolina law provides injured individuals with the right to pursue compensation for the full extent of their losses.

Attorney J. Olin McDougall, II, founder of McDougall Law Firm, LLC, represented the client throughout the legal process. Mr. McDougall has spent his career representing injured South Carolinians in personal injury and accident cases across Beaufort and throughout the state. His approach to construction site injury cases involves a thorough investigation into the circumstances of the accident, identification of all parties whose negligence contributed to the harm, and an aggressive pursuit of compensation that accounts not only for immediate medical expenses but also for the long-term impact of the injury on the client's life, livelihood, and well-being.

Construction site injury cases often involve complex liability questions. Determining who bears legal responsibility for a workplace accident can require a careful examination of contractual relationships between general contractors and subcontractors, site safety protocols and whether they were followed, equipment maintenance records, applicable Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations, and the actions of multiple parties who may each share a degree of responsibility for the conditions that led to the accident.

South Carolina law allows injured individuals to pursue claims against every party whose negligence contributed to the harm, which means the scope of recovery in a construction site case can extend well beyond what an initial review of the accident might suggest.

An experienced personal injury lawyer who understands how to navigate this complexity, conduct a thorough investigation, and hold every responsible party accountable can make a decisive difference in the outcome of a case and in the total compensation a client is ultimately able to recover. The $1,200,000 settlement secured for this client reflects compensation for the injuries sustained, the medical treatment required, and the broader impact the accident has had on the client's life. McDougall Law Firm, LLC approached this case with the same dedication it brings to every client relationship, investing the time and resources necessary to build a thorough record and pursue the full value of the claim.

McDougall Law Firm, LLC has built a record of results for clients across South Carolina by providing dedicated, experienced legal representation in personal injury cases involving construction accidents, car accidents, truck accidents, slip and fall incidents, workers' compensation claims, wrongful death, and other serious injury matters.

The firm serves clients throughout Beaufort, Hilton Head, Bluffton, and the surrounding Lowcountry communities, and is known for its client-first approach and its willingness to take difficult cases as far as necessary to achieve a just outcome for every client it represents. Injured South Carolinians who have been hurt due to someone else's negligence deserve legal representation that treats their case with the seriousness it demands. Construction site injuries in particular often involve significant long-term consequences, and the decisions made in the early stages of a claim can have a lasting impact on what compensation is ultimately recovered.

The legal team at McDougall Law Firm, LLC is experienced in making those decisions correctly and in standing by clients from the first consultation through the final resolution of their case.
