Mountaintop Web Design Partners With Golden Constructors on Website Redesign Launch

July 09, 2026

GREENWOOD VILLAGE, CO - July 09, 2026 -
Mountaintop Web Design has announced its partnership with Golden Constructors, a full-service general contractor based in Castle Rock, Colorado, on the launch of a newly redesigned website for the commercial construction firm. The site serves as the company's primary digital platform and is designed to reflect the depth of experience and range of services Golden Constructors has brought to commercial construction projects across Colorado since 1984.

The project emerged from Golden Constructors' need to update a digital presence that could accurately represent the scope and credibility of a firm with more than four decades of experience in commercial general contracting. Mountaintop Web Design led strategy, design, and development throughout the engagement, working with the Golden Constructors team to navigate the competing demands of a busy construction operation while delivering a finished product that met the company's goals.

"We interviewed numerous website development companies before selecting Mountaintop Web Design," said Garrett Tormoen, Marketing Manager at Golden Constructors. "Their professionalism, clear understanding of our limited availability, and alignment with our overall project goals gave us strong confidence in our decision.

Throughout the process of rebuilding our website, Mountaintop Web Design exceeded our expectations. Their professionalism, flexibility in adapting to unexpected changes, and commitment to delivering a high-quality final product made the entire experience excellent."

Golden Constructors offers a comprehensive range of commercial construction services, including preconstruction planning, construction management and general contracting, public sector construction, private sector and commercial construction, education construction, and sustainable and energy-efficient building practices. The firm has developed particular expertise in education construction, having built K-12 schools, higher education facilities, and early childhood centers, as well as public sector projects in partnership with local governments, school districts, and public agencies. It holds prequalification with multiple jurisdictions, reflecting the breadth of its public work portfolio.

Mountaintop Web Design approached the redesign with an emphasis on communicating that range of expertise clearly and efficiently to visitors who may arrive from different points in the procurement process. The site structure was organized around Golden Constructors' service lines and project history, with content designed to give prospective clients, architects, and public agencies a clear picture of the firm's capabilities before initiating contact. According to Mountaintop Web Design, construction firms require particular attention to credibility signaling within their digital presence, as the decision to engage a general contractor typically involves significant due diligence on the part of the client.

"A firm like Golden Constructors has built its reputation over 40 years of completed projects and long-term client relationships," said Josiah Bussing, owner of Mountaintop Web Design. "The website needed to reflect that history in a way that is organized and easy to navigate, while also communicating the firm's approach to communication and transparency, which is a real differentiator in the construction industry. Every decision we made throughout the build was strategic, from how we structured the service pages to how we presented their project portfolio, with the goal of making it immediately clear to a prospective client why Golden Constructors stands apart from other general contractors in the region."

The redesign also prioritized mobile performance and cross-device consistency, ensuring that visitors accessing the site from any device encounter a reliable and professional experience. Mountaintop Web Design noted that for firms operating in competitive procurement environments, a well-functioning and visually credible website can meaningfully influence how prospective clients perceive a contractor's organizational capability before a formal conversation takes place.

The website is now live and accessible to the public. Golden Constructors intends to use the platform as its central point of contact for project inquiries, subcontractor relationships, and general information about its services and completed work, with updates expected as the firm continues to add to its project portfolio.
