

Easterling Family Law Expands Its Family Law Services to Ballantyne

August 11, 2026

Matthews, North Carolina - August 11, 2026 -

Easterling Family Law, a family law firm serving south Charlotte, North Carolina, has expanded its service area to include the Ballantyne community. The firm, which has traditionally concentrated on Matthews, Weddington, and Waxhaw, now extends its practice to families throughout Ballantyne and the surrounding neighborhoods.

The expansion reflects a growing demand for family law representation in the south Charlotte region. Easterling Family Law in Ballantyne will provide the same range of services the firm offers across Mecklenburg County, including divorce, separation, child custody and support, alimony, mediation, property and asset division, and matters involving domestic violence.

The firm has long maintained ties to the Ballantyne area, with familiarity in local neighborhoods, schools, and community life. Its legal team is also experienced with the Mecklenburg County court process, an element the firm considers central to representing clients in the region.

"Extending representation into Ballantyne allows the firm to reach more families who are navigating difficult transitions," said Lindsey Easterling of Easterling Family Law. "The community has deep roots in south Charlotte, and the goal is to provide clear, steady guidance to residents facing family law matters close to home."

The firm approaches its work with an emphasis on compassionate guidance, focused experience, and local commitment. Attorneys handle cases with attention to the practical and emotional realities that accompany family law disputes, from initial separation through resolution.

"Family law matters are among the most personal legal issues a person can face," Easterling added. "Serving clients in Ballantyne is a natural step for a firm that already knows the area and the courts that families here rely on."

The legal team includes Lindsey Easterling, Kathryn Yates, Debra McDuffie, Kristen Bens, and Tandi Gerow. Together, the attorneys and staff handle a broad spectrum of family law concerns, working with clients to identify options suited to their individual circumstances. The firm also offers mediation as an alternative to litigation in appropriate cases, an approach that can reduce conflict during divorce and custody proceedings.

Beyond its legal practice, the firm participates in the life of the communities it serves, maintaining connections to local schools and neighborhoods throughout south Charlotte. That local presence, the firm notes, informs its understanding of the families and circumstances it represents.

With the addition of Ballantyne, Easterling Family Law continues to concentrate its practice on residents of south Charlotte and the greater Mecklenburg County area. The firm intends to bring the same standards of advocacy and client service to Ballantyne that it applies across its existing service area.

Easterling Family Law is a family law firm based in the south Charlotte, North Carolina area. The firm focuses on divorce and related matters, including separation, child custody and support, alimony, property and asset division, mediation, and domestic violence cases. Serving clients across Ballantyne, Matthews, Weddington, Waxhaw, and the surrounding communities, the firm draws on its familiarity with the Mecklenburg County court system to represent individuals and families throughout the region.
