

Warner's Outdoor Solutions Addresses Summer Weed and Insect Challenges in Twin Cities Landscapes

July 17, 2026

WOODBURY, MN - July 17, 2026 -

Warner's Outdoor Solutions has outlined strategies for managing weeds and insects during the peak summer months in the Twin Cities metro area. As temperatures rise and growing conditions intensify through July, the company continues to deliver services that support the health and appearance of residential and commercial landscapes through targeted weed elimination, insect control, and shrub trimming.

Summer conditions in Minnesota promote increased activity from broadleaf weeds and various insect populations that can stress turf and ornamental plants. The company's fertilization and weed control programs include mid-summer applications of broadleaf treatments as part of structured seasonal packages. These applications address dandelions, clover, creeping charlie, thistle, and other common invaders while preserving nutrients for desirable grass species. Separate weed control sprays allow focused attention on established weeds without interfering with fertilizer timing.

Landscape maintenance services extend weed management beyond the lawn. Professional teams perform weed pulling and spraying in mulch beds, rock areas, patios, sidewalks, driveways, and walkways. Multiple service plan options are available, including one-time visits, three-times-per-year schedules covering spring, summer, and fall, and monthly programs. These plans help maintain clean, defined landscape areas and prevent overgrowth that can compete with desired plants.

Insect control plays a significant role in summer property management. Services target lawn insects, grubs, Japanese beetles, mosquitoes, and other pests that become more active in warmer weather. Treatments are applied to reduce damage to turf, shrubs, and surrounding vegetation while integrating with overall landscape care. The company also supports perimeter treatments around homes to address potential pest concerns transitioning from outdoor to indoor areas.

Shrub trimming and maintenance form an additional element of summer programs. Regular pruning promotes healthy growth patterns, improves air circulation within plantings, removes dead or damaged material, and enhances overall landscape structure. These practices complement weed and insect management to produce cohesive, well-kept outdoor spaces.

Ryan Warner, President of Warner's Outdoor Solutions, stated, "Summer conditions in the Twin Cities create opportunities for weeds and insects to impact landscapes, making timely professional applications important for maintaining health." He added, "Our services for weed control, insect management, and shrub trimming allow residential and commercial properties to address these challenges efficiently throughout the season without requiring homeowners to handle the labor and timing themselves."

Warner's Outdoor Solutions customizes programs based on property size, conditions, and client preferences. Fertilization utilizes premium granular products, including slow-release formulas suitable for mid-summer heat to avoid burning. Weed and insect treatments follow established guidelines and local environmental factors. Notification procedures, safety signage, and pet and family considerations are standard parts of the application process.

Integration with complementary services strengthens results. Lawn mowing maintains even turf height, while irrigation adjustments ensure proper moisture levels around treated areas. Aeration, dethatching, and overseeding options support recovery and density. Tree and shrub care, hardscaping elements such as patios and retaining walls, and seasonal transitions receive coordinated attention through comprehensive plans.

The company maintains its base in Woodbury, Minnesota, and serves residential and commercial clients throughout the Twin Cities metro area, including Minneapolis, St. Paul, Maple Grove, Plymouth, Lake Elmo, and surrounding communities. Trained professionals manage all aspects of summer maintenance with attention to safety protocols, product labels, and regional best practices.

Warner's Outdoor Solutions has delivered lawn care, landscaping, and related maintenance services for more than 25 years in the region. Its ongoing programs continue to help properties manage seasonal pressures from weeds, insects, and growth while providing convenience for owners focused on enjoying their outdoor spaces.
