Morocco Countryside Tours' 15-day Sahara-to-Atlantic itinerary offers Berber-led journeys through Morocco's diverse terrain from the Sahara to the Atlantic coast, with over a decade of guiding experience.

Multi-day private tours are seeing growing interest from travelers seeking immersive cultural experiences that go beyond standard sightseeing itineraries. Rather than visiting multiple cities in rapid succession, an increasing number of visitors are choosing extended journeys that allow for deeper engagement with local communities, landscapes, and traditions.

Morocco Countryside Tours, a family-owned tour operator based in Marrakech, has been organizing private, tailor-made itineraries across Morocco for over a decade. The company's 15-day Sahara-to-Atlantic journey takes travelers from the Saharan dunes of Erg Chebbi through the Atlas Mountains, imperial cities, and coastal towns, reaching destinations that standard tour packages rarely include. Led by native Berber guides, the itinerary includes overnight stays in luxury desert camps, visits to remote Berber villages, cookery classes with local families, and guided walks through gorges and valleys.

"Meeting people from different cultures and sharing our culture and history with them is what drives us every day," said Said, Head Guide and Founder of Morocco Countryside Tours. "We grew up in the desert as nomads, and we know places and communities that most travelers never get to see. Our goal is to share the real Morocco, the Morocco that exists beyond the main tourist routes Said grew up as a nomad in the Sahara Desert before his family settled in Merzouga, where he began guiding camel treks for travelers visiting the Erg Chebbi dunes.."

The 15-day itinerary covers a broad geographic arc across the country. Travelers begin in Marrakech, cross the High Atlas Mountains through the Tizi n'Tichka pass, and descend into the Draa Valley before reaching the Erg Chebbi dunes near Merzouga. The route continues north through the Todra and Dades gorges, passes through the cedar forests of the Middle Atlas, and reaches the imperial cities of Fes and Meknes. From there, the journey heads west to the Atlantic coast, visiting the blue-washed streets of Chefchaouen and the Roman ruins of Volubilis before ending in Rabat or Casablanca. Accommodation ranges from traditional riads in imperial cities to luxury desert camps in the Sahara, with meals featuring local Berber cuisine prepared by host families. Each day's itinerary is adjustable based on traveler interests, with guides offering alternative routes and stops based on seasonal conditions and group preferences..

The operator has earned more than 800 five-star reviews on TripAdvisor as of 2026, indicating consistent demand for culturally immersive private tour experiences. Guides are native Berbers who speak fluent English and offer insights into local customs, history, and daily life that go beyond guidebook material. The company also supports local Berber nomad families by providing employment and educational opportunities through its operations. The company's private tour model, which assigns dedicated guides and vehicles to each group, has proven particularly popular among families and small groups seeking a personalized pace without the constraints of fixed group departure dates. The trend toward private, guided travel has been particularly notable in Morocco, where diverse geography and rich cultural heritage offer distinct advantages for customized multi-day itineraries..

Morocco's tourism sector has seen a shift toward experience-based travel, with visitors increasingly prioritizing private, customizable itineraries over group tours. Multi-day journeys that combine cultural immersion with natural landscapes have become a growing segment of the market, particularly among travelers from North America and Europe seeking authentic, locally guided experiences.
