Glass Company in Texas Brings Decades of Experience to Custom Glasswork

July 24, 2026

AUSTIN, TX - July 24, 2026 -

More than 60 years after beginning as a small family-run business, Alamo Glass continues to serve homeowners, contractors, architects, and business owners as a glass company in Austin, TX, providing custom glass cutting, repair, fabrication, and installation services. The company?s long operating history, combined with its same-day glass cutting service and broad range of residential and commercial work, reflects the changing needs of property owners and construction professionals over decades of growth and development.

Custom glass projects often involve details that standard products cannot address. A shower enclosure may require precise measurements around an existing space. A damaged window may need a replacement pane cut to specific dimensions. Commercial projects can involve larger installations, including storefront glazing systems and work across multi-floor office buildings. Alamo Glass handles these varied needs through services covering bath and shower glass, textured glass, doors and windows, mirrors, commercial applications, and tabletops.

Same-day glass cutting provides another option for projects requiring a custom piece on a shorter timeline.

While more involved installations require planning, measurements, fabrication, and scheduling, smaller glass needs can often begin with an accurately cut piece designed for a specific application. The company?s ability to work across both custom cutting and larger installation projects allows it to serve a wide range of customers and project types.

Alamo Glass has also built a record of work for established businesses, including Schlotzsky's, Krispy Kreme Doughnuts, and Papa John's Pizza. Those projects sit alongside thousands of residential and small-business jobs completed over the company?s history. The range of customers illustrates the different demands placed on a glass contractor, from individual repairs and custom mirrors to commercial glazing systems that must be coordinated with larger construction or renovation efforts.

The company?s project history also reflects the range of settings in which custom glass is used. In residential spaces, glass can serve a practical role in showers, doors, windows, and mirrors while also contributing to the design of a room. In commercial properties, glazing may be part of a storefront, office interior, or larger construction project. That variety requires the ability to adapt the work to the specific dimensions, materials, and function of each space rather than relying on a single standard approach.

The company?s longevity offers a practical view of how glasswork has changed alongside the properties it serves. Older homes may require replacement glass that matches existing openings, while newer construction and commercial renovations can call for custom designs and larger glazing systems. Across those projects, accurate measurements, careful cutting, appropriate materials, and proper installation remain central to the finished work.

A company representative said the business?s long history is rooted in the relationships developed through everyday service, noting that the company has continued to work with local homeowners and businesses while expanding the range of projects it can handle. That perspective reflects a service model built around repeat relationships rather than a single type of glass application.

The business maintains an Austin showroom open Monday through Friday, where residential and commercial customers can discuss project requirements and explore available glass options. Its team works with property owners and industry professionals on repairs, custom designs, replacement glass, and new installations.
