

Government Auction Adds Undeveloped Land Listings Across Western States, Including Nye County, Nevada

September 08, 2026

Los Angeles, California - September 08, 2026 -

Government Auction, an online marketplace offering undeveloped land throughout the United States, has expanded its inventory of Western properties available through online auctions and their Buy Now Store listings, adding parcels in several states that include Nye County, Nevada. The company reports that Nevada is among the thirteen states where it currently maintains listings, alongside Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Missouri, New Mexico, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming.

The company identifies Nye County, Nevada as one region represented in its Western catalog. Nye County is the largest county in Nevada by land area and the third largest county in the contiguous United States. Much of that terrain consists of public land administered by federal agencies such as the Bureau of Land Management, which oversees millions of acres across the state. The county encompasses high desert basins, mountain ranges, and portions of federally designated recreation areas.

Nye County contains several publicly accessible destinations. Berlin-Ichthyosaur State Park combines a preserved mining ghost town with a protected site of fossilized marine reptiles. The Toiyabe and Toquima ranges reach elevations that provide cooler climates and established hiking routes, and portions of Death Valley National Park extend toward the western edge of the region. State and federal scenic byways cross the county, passing historic mining settlements, hot springs, and basins where limited light pollution supports night-sky viewing. These public lands and parks are managed independently of any private property and are open to visitors regardless of land ownership.

Government Auction offers undeveloped land in Nye County Nevada as part of its broader collection of parcels across the Western states. The company describes its Nevada inventory as consisting of undeveloped acreage located within the region, and notes that the listings are distinct from the adjacent public lands and parks, which are administered by government agencies.

The company cited demand for outdoor recreation as context for its Western focus. According to the Outdoor Industry Association, participation in outdoor activities such as hiking and camping has increased in recent years, with tens of millions of Americans reporting such activities annually.

"Government Auction lists undeveloped parcels in thirteen states and provides property details, acreage figures, and images through a single online platform," said Ray L. Perry, Marketing Director. "The addition of Western listings, including acreage in Nye County, gives prospective landowners a way to review available properties in regions of the country where large tracts of open land remain." Availability of land in Nye County Nevada varies as parcels are listed and sold through the company's platform.

Government Auction maintains listings that include property size in acres, location details, and images for each parcel. The company organizes its catalog by state and property size, allowing users to review available inventory through its online marketplace.

GovernmentAuction.com is an online marketplace for buying undeveloped land across the United States. Through its Buy Now Land Store and online land auctions, GovernmentAuction.com connects buyers with available properties in multiple states and regions, offering an accessible way to explore and purchase land online. The company specializes in undeveloped land and provides flexible purchasing options designed to make land ownership available to a wide range of buyers.
