

Wymore Decks & Outdoor Living Expands Residential Fencing and Gate Services

July 28, 2026

OMAHA, NE - July 28, 2026 -

Wymore Decks & Outdoor Living, a family-owned deck and outdoor living contractor based in Omaha, Nebraska, has expanded its residential fencing, gate, and access-control services for homeowners across the Omaha metro area. The move broadens the company's work beyond its established deck building as demand grows for secure, low-maintenance outdoor perimeters heading into the summer building season.

With more than 100 completed projects, the company built its reputation on custom decks and outdoor living spaces. Expanding its fencing and gate work gives homeowners a single contractor for the full perimeter of a property, from the deck to the fence line, rather than hiring separate crews for different parts of the same backyard.

"Homeowners kept asking us to handle the fence and gates after we built their deck, so growing this side of the business was a natural step," said Levi Wymore, owner of Wymore Decks & Outdoor Living. "It lets a homeowner work with one team for the whole backyard instead of coordinating separate contractors."

The company's residential fencing covers security, privacy, and pool applications, built in wood, vinyl, composite, ornamental iron, ornamental aluminum, and chain link. Each material offers a different balance of appearance, durability, and upkeep, and the team reviews those trade-offs with homeowners before construction begins.

Composite and aluminum fencing have drawn interest from homeowners looking to limit seasonal upkeep, while ornamental iron is often chosen where appearance and strength matter along a front boundary. Wood remains a common choice for privacy fencing where a traditional look is the goal.

Every fencing project begins with a site assessment and planning, followed by permit handling, site preparation, and post installation. Post setting carries added weight in eastern Nebraska, where the frost line sits at roughly 42 inches below grade and repeated freeze-thaw cycles push against posts and footings that are not set deep enough. Setting posts below that depth helps a fence stay straight and stable through the region's winters.

Gate work spans swing, slide, cantilever, pedestrian, decorative, and retractable styles, built to match the fence in steel, aluminum, wood, vinyl, chain link, or composite. The company handles design, fabrication or procurement, installation, and permitting assistance so each gate operates smoothly and meets local requirements.

The expanded services also include automated gate operators and access control, an area of growing interest among residential clients. The company installs slide, swing, barrier, overhead, and vertical lift operators, along with keypad and remote-entry systems, using equipment from manufacturers including LiftMaster, Chamberlain, and Apollo Gate Operators. These systems let a homeowner open a gate from a phone or keypad and control who enters a property without leaving the house.

"Automated gates and keypad entry used to be mostly a commercial request, and now more residential clients want that convenience and control," Wymore said. He added that the same weather that tests a fence also tests gate hardware, so operators and latches are chosen to hold up through heat, cold, and the severe storms common to the area.

Fencing and gate projects in the Omaha area generally require a permit, and the company manages that step for homeowners, confirming setbacks and any homeowner association requirements before work begins. Handling the paperwork is intended to keep a project on schedule and avoid the delays that can follow a missed approval.

Wymore Decks & Outdoor Living is family-owned, licensed, bonded, and insured, and led by owner Levi Wymore. The company backs its work with a workmanship warranty, including a lifetime craftsmanship warranty on qualifying low-maintenance projects, and offers free estimates and 3D design so homeowners can review a plan before work begins.
