May 19, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Total Training is proud to announce the release of their newest course, Photoshop CC Masterclass, Part 1, presented by Adobe Certified Expert, Martin Perhiniak.

Brad Slavin with Total Training says, "We are very excited to announce the launch of this latest course that is designed to provide both beginners and intermediate level users a rock solid foundation in Adobe Photoshop."

The course is aimed at anyone who wants to get into the creative industry, as it takes students from beginning concepts, like cropping images and working with layers, through intermediate concepts, like warping images, drawing vector shapes, and masking.

Slavin says that being familiar with digital imaging is important for a number of industries. He adds that although the course is targeted towards beginners and intermediate level users, even those who have substantial experience in using the software can benefit from the course because they could be missing out on some key features and techniques, as many of them have been self-taught.

Slavin explains: "This seven hour course is designed to be a precursor to our Part 2 course. The second part of the course will give students nearly five hours of additional instruction. Combined, they will provide one complete and comprehensive training series.?"

Instructor Martin Perhiniak will share his design principles as well as best practices that he has learned over the years while working as a designer on various projects. Martin has worked on well-known projects including Dr. Who from BBC, Pixar's Cars and Toy Story, and Hot Wheels from Mattel.

Those interested in learning more about the course can visit Total Training's product page, where a complete overview of the course can be found. Pricing for the course, as well as other information on the upcoming second part of the Adobe Photoshop Masterclass can also be found on Total Training's official website, totaltraining.com.
