All Pro Newton Deck Builders Expands Deck Building Service Area to Waltham

September 17, 2026

NEWTON, MA - September 17, 2026 -
All Pro Newton Deck Builders has extended its residential deck construction and outdoor living services to Waltham, Massachusetts, adding the city to a service area that already covers much of the western suburbs of Boston. The expansion connects Waltham homeowners with a dedicated local resource for deck design, installation, repair, and related hardscape work under the company's MetroWest Deck Solutions branch.

The addition responds to sustained demand from Middlesex County, where Waltham counts 65,218 residents according to the 2020 United States Census. The company now lists the city alongside neighboring communities that include Newton, Watertown, Belmont, Weston, Cambridge, and Somerville, placing Waltham within an established regional network of deck contractors rather than treating it as an isolated market.

"The move formalizes a service area that homeowners across Waltham had increasingly requested," said John Greene, owner of All Pro Newton Deck Builders. "Local availability shortens scheduling times and gives residents a single point of contact for design, permitting, and on-site construction from the first consultation through the final inspection." Homeowner input is built into each design plan from the outset rather than being fitted to a fixed template, which matters on the irregular lot sizes common in older neighborhoods, Greene added.

Waltham residents can now access the company's full range of outdoor construction offerings, which include deck design and installation, deck repair and restoration, porch design and installation, patios and hardscapes, shade structures and pergolas, and pool decks. Each project begins with a planning stage that defines the style, size, shape, and cost of the build before any construction starts, an approach intended to align the finished result with a stated budget.

The expansion arrives as outdoor living space has become a larger share of residential renovation budgets nationally, with decks and patios frequently cited among the improvements homeowners pursue to extend usable square footage. In dense inner-ring suburbs such as Waltham, where lot sizes limit ground-level additions, elevated decks and multi-level structures often serve as the practical route to added living area. The company's project range spans small entry landings through multi-level builds that integrate seating, railings, and shade structures.

Both pressure-treated wood and composite systems are offered for new builds, giving homeowners a choice between lower material cost and longer-term maintenance savings. The distinction matters in a climate such as eastern Massachusetts, where freeze-and-thaw cycles and seasonal moisture place recurring stress on exterior structures and influence how often a deck must be resealed or repaired.

Deck construction remains one of the more regulated categories of residential improvement in Massachusetts, where footing depth, railing height, and load capacity fall under the state building code and local permitting review. A locally focused service area is intended to help homeowners navigate those requirements with contractors already familiar with municipal inspection practices across the MetroWest region.

Waltham holds a defined place in American industrial history as the site where the Boston Manufacturing Company established one of the first integrated textile mills in the early nineteenth century. The city later earned the nickname Watch City after the Waltham Watch Company began operations there in 1854, producing timepieces, compasses, and other precision instruments. Its mix of historic and contemporary housing creates demand for both new deck builds and the restoration of aging structures.

Scheduling for the expanded area follows the company's standard hours of Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 8 a.m. to noon. Estimates for Waltham projects are processed through the same intake used across the existing territory, with design consultation preceding any construction commitment.

The addition of Waltham continues a pattern of measured geographic growth for All Pro Newton Deck Builders across the communities surrounding Newton. Company materials indicate that each service area is supported by the same crews and design staff rather than subcontracted labor, a structure intended to keep results consistent as coverage widens.
